

London economic summit to be Carter's world debut

Washington (UPI) — President Carter flies to London this week for his debut in summit diplomacy and to reaffirm the U.S. role as the leader of the free world.

Carter, 52, has his work cut out for him on his first trip abroad as President, with preparations being made for him to take part in three major international meetings.

During his May 5-10 journey, Carter will participate in the seven-nation economic summit, the NATO Ministerial Council meeting, and a four-power summit, which will include British Prime Minister James Callaghan, French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Carter knows he has a lot riding on his first plunge into international summitry and he will be watched closely.

On the other hand, the meetings with the heads of state are coming at a time when there is "extraordinary weakness" among the European allies, both economically and politically, according to administration officials.

At the heart of the economic problems is the "basic political weakness" of many of the leaders Carter will be meeting — some for the first time, including Giscard and Schmidt, and Italian Prime Minister Mario Andreotti.

As White House officials see it the "Downing Street Summit" will give Carter a chance to get acquainted with the other leaders and the opportunity to "lay out the basic commitments and guidelines" of his policy.

Carter sees the London meetings as "a new time for building," officials said, and will "emphasize the importance" of the interrelationship between the United States and its allies.

He plans to stress "economic interdependence" officials said and also will discuss the "need for coordinating actions to end the world recession."

Free trade and economic relations between the developed and underdeveloped countries also will be discussed.

As part of the picture, Carter also will try to broaden the talks to include nuclear nonproliferation, arms transfers, and defense procurement. Detailed papers on these subjects are being prepared for him.

Carter also will address the NATO conference reinforcing the U.S. commitment to NATO, with emphasis on the "strength of the alliance and making NATO work more effectively," officials said.

The value of existing strategy and the flexible response also will be discussed. Berlin and major East-West issues are on the agenda for the four-power summit May 9, and there is no doubt Carter's strong defense of human rights will be among the subjects.

On the same day, after that meeting, Carter will fly to Geneva for a four-hour meeting with Syria's President Hafez Assad on the Middle East.

Carter has indicated the trip to London will be his only foreign foray this year, but international events could change that. Mrs. Carter was invited, but will not be accompanying her husband.

With Callaghan as his guide, Carter will spend his first day in England touring New Castle where he will drop by an industrial plant and visit the ancestral home of George Washington, now an historic landmark.

There also will be social functions, including dinner with Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham Palace and other banquets with the summit leaders.

During his stay in London, Carter will be a house guest at Winfield House, the splendid U.S. Embassy residence decorated by multimillionaire Walter Annenberg during the Nixon era.

Senate may make shaker Zorinsky a nonmover

By Andy Montgomery

Special to The Sunday Journal and Star
Washington — Frankly, Capitol Hill hasn't yet figured out Ed Zorinsky.

"Frankly, I don't give a damn," snapped an aging veteran senator of the Nebraska's much publicized campaign to cleanse the Senate of its time-wasting and self-serving traditions.

"Frankly, Zorinsky is viewed as a refreshing type of personality," commented a top Senate staffer of the freshman who seems to aspire to the cloak of a new Populist.

"He has a tiger by the tail and can't let go. Eventually, it will destroy him," said a respected legislator and friend of the 48-year-old former mayor of Omaha.

That U.S. Sen. Edward Zorinsky is a shaker is unquestioned. In four months as the junior senator from Nebraska, he has managed to shake up the stuffy Senate with his antiestablishment and antileadership observations — and collected reams of national and favorable publicity in the process.

But is he a mover? Has he gone too far in his criticism, upset too many among those who count in the power structure, who could care less about Zorinsky's popularity and image with the "average voter" set?

Has he hurt himself and, more to the point, his effectiveness in representing Nebraska's interests in the corridors of power and influence of the U.S. Senate? Zorinsky thinks not.

But there seems to be a growing consensus here that Zorinsky has indeed hurt himself and Nebraska, not permanently, not unalterably, but nonetheless self-inflicted an effectiveness wound.

The Nebraskan feels he has public opinion on his side. He is convinced the only way to bring about changes in the Senate and the bureaucracy, to make it more responsive to people, is through public pressure. And as he sees it, that means being outspoken, saying what's on his mind. If that means upsetting the power brokers, so be it. "I could care less whom I offend," he says.

"People expect me to tell it like it is," he says and seems to mean it. If a day of following the senator around is any barometer, he is consistent. His public statements match those he gives to special interests including labor, in his office.

Thousands of letters poured into his office after the national spotlighting of his statement that he almost quit the Senate because of that body's clubiness and lack of responsiveness to the people's interests.

He now vows to serve a full six-year term, although he still insists that "if I knew during the campaign what I know now, I would not have run for the Senate. I probably would have entertained the thought of running for a second term as mayor."

Had he not been a mayor, with that office's activist role in policy making, he says, "I would have had an easier time of adjusting to this way of life." Sen. Dale Bumpers, who served as governor of Arkansas, has had the same transition problem.

Whether he cares to admit it or not, Zorinsky clearly basks in the sunlight of national exposure. It almost verges on an ego trip to be lionized by the thousands who urged him not to resign, to continue to challenge the established and the entrenched.

He has appeared on national television, on the "Today" and "Good Morning, America" shows, has had Barbara Walters come to him and his office for an interview rather than vice versa. He has been the subject of countless laudatory editorials.

Zorinsky says he has received only favorable reaction from his Senate colleagues. He is convinced that his attacks on the Senate way of doing things have helped him, not hurt him.

Republican and longtime Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina remarked that "it didn't take you long to find out what's wrong around here." Zorinsky has been lauded for his gutsiness by Bumpers, Gary Hart of Colorado, Jim Abourezk of South Dakota, Orrin Hatch

Zorinsky candidly evaluates colleagues

Washington — For a politician, Nebraska Sen. Ed Zorinsky can be remarkably and refreshingly candid.

To a fault, some will say. In an interview last week, the freshman Democratic senator from Omaha broke senatorial tradition by speaking on the record about some of his colleagues.

His reputation as an outspoken antiestablishment figure will be furthered by the frank appraisals. At the same time, his popularity within the Senate is certain to plummet.

Zorinsky belatedly recognized the risks of going public with his remarks. Two days after the interview, he told the reporter, "I had no business commenting on them."

He wanted it made known that "these are no more than first impressions and I could be totally inaccurate. Six months from now, my impressions could well change."

"I will be the first to admit I have a lot of shortcomings, too, and they (senators) have the right to point them out, too."

Here are Zorinsky's impressions of other senators:

Curtis

• Carl Curtis, Nebraska Republican: "A lot of my colleagues think he is very negative and wants to be on the 'no' side of every issue. I respect Carl Curtis because of his experience, but I do not think he has been an effective senator for Nebraska."

• Herman Talmadge, Georgia Democrat and chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, on which Zorinsky serves: "I respect him. He has the ability to have a tremendous impact on agriculture in this country. Without his leadership, as bad economically as agriculture is today, it would be far worse off. He is one of the more senior members of the Senate who can more easily succumb than I to compromise and trade-offs (on legislation)."

• Warren Magnuson, Washington

Democrat and Chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, of which Zorinsky is a member: "He is a kind of gentleman. He allows too much latitude in meetings... discussions are too trivial... unnecessary conversation (among senators)."

McGovern

• Robert Byrd, West Virginia Democrat and Senate majority leader: "One of the most cool, calculating professional individuals I have met in my life. He probably has a better understanding of parliamentary procedures of any man in the Senate, together with the knowledge at all times of where everyone stands on an issue."

• Dick Clark, Iowa Democrat: "He impresses me as a senator well versed in agriculture, but I have not had that much contact to evaluate him as to how much he has accomplished. He seems to be a good senator."

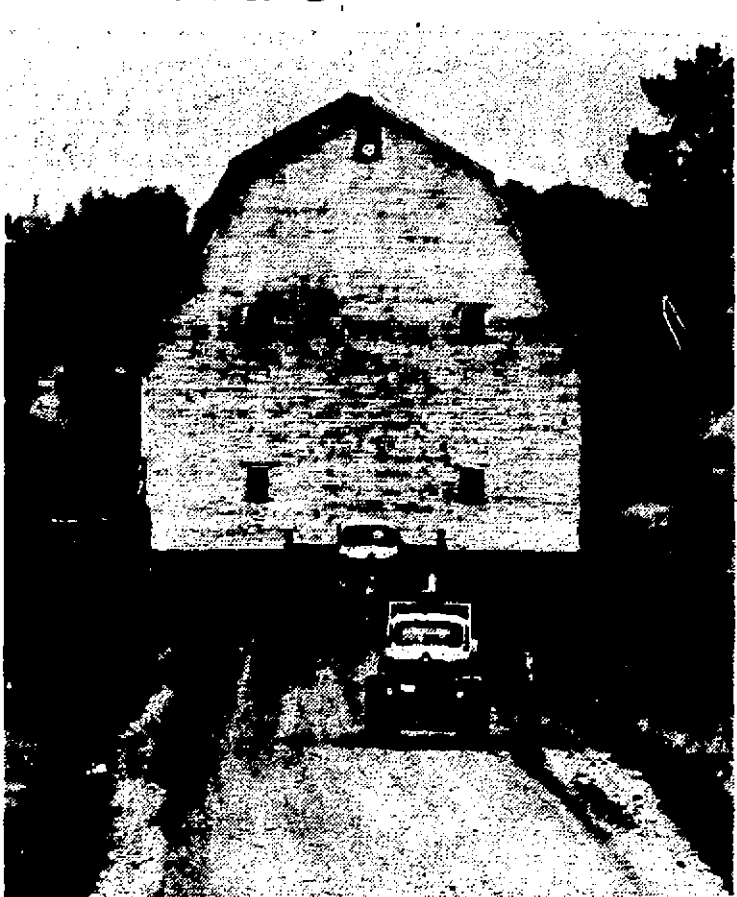

Clark

• Charles Percy, Illinois Republican: "He gives me an impression of having a facade greater than his abilities. He makes up in speaking ability what he lacks in innate talent. He always seems to be trying to impress people that he has more ability and talent than he does."

Voters go to the polls Tuesday to fill three seats on the City Council, four on the school board and two on the Airport Authority and to decide whether city bonds will be issued to finance a downtown Civic Center. For a view of the candidates, the bond issue and list of polling places, see today's General Election Voters Guide, Section V.

Polls conducted for The Sunday Journal and Star indicate that in Tuesday's general election, City Council incumbents Sue Bailey and John Robinson probably will be reelected, the $7 million civic center bond issue could be defeated and Fannie Thomas may upset Stanley Linnertz in the school board race. # Greedy grasping success, Elvis sold his rebellion to top bidder

By John Milward
(c) Chicago Sun-Times

Phenomena come in all sizes, but there can only be one Elvis. He was a great American catalyst, mixing black rhythm and blues and white country music and coming up with a mutant child called rock and roll.

This happened in the Sun Studios in 1954, when the boys were pausing for a Coke and Elvis impetuously started bawling out an uptempo "That's All Right" on his guitar. Nobody was there to watch.

As important as those historic sessions were, though, the true rock revolution was heralded when Elvis rode that big pink Cadillac of a musical form into a realm of celebrity nobody knew existed. Twitching his hips below the camera line on the Ed Sullivan Show, he became the first media-fed pop hero. Between the music and the resulting attention, his ascension to King was as immediate as it was inevitable.

Elvis embraced his fame ferociously. Consider him in his $10,000 twenty-pound gold-lane diamond-studded suit, the one he wore with such calculated bravado on his second album of gold singles, "50,000,000 Elvis Fans Can't Be Wrong."

Looking at the image today — and there's an even better shot in the "Rolling Stone Illustrated History of Rock and Roll," with the El suited up in front of a middle-class living room fireplace — Elvis might as well be from another planet. Considering the cultural machinations that have occurred since he burst into the spotlight, this isn't far from the truth.

If Elvis only could have risen from a particular instant of time, a period of complacency tempered by smoldering frustration. The same was true of the America that did cultural flipflops when the Beatles shook their mop-tops on that same Sullivan show. In the contrast of the two cultural explosions lies much of the Presley mystique.

The power of his best music is undeniable. With the help of electric guitarist Scotty Moore and bassist Bill Black and under the tutelage of small-time Memphis rhythm and blues producer Sam Phillips, Elvis's inspired young voice galvanized a style based on contradiction.

Phillips had boasted that if he could find a young white singer who could sound and feel like a black one, he'd make a million. Actually, Phillips only made $35,000 when RCA bought Elvis's contract and tapes, but Elvis embodied the producer's dream.

What makes the Elvis story so

remarkable 20 years later is that critically speaking, he was only at his creative peak during those early sessions and on his first string of big-time singles for RCA. No rock collection is complete without "The Sun Sessions" (finally released as complete entity in 1976 by RCA) and "Elvis' Golden Records."

After these, the pickings are slim. While million sellers followed one another like ducks following their mother (Elvis' worldwide sales are now approaching 300 million), their relative quality couldn't tarnish the King's crown.

With the help of his carnival-barking manager, Col. Tom Parker, Elvis became the biggest show on Earth and, following a surrealistic stint in the army, he retired to Hollywood to enshrine his fame. He spent most of the '60s in a never-ending series of schlock movies and left his recorded catalog to be bloated by soundtracks and half-baked album releases.

For rock and rollers, Elvis had gotten fat by going to Hollywood and selling his rebellion to the highest bidder. And before long, Elvis' body mirrored his musical inactivity, until reports of his weight became as common as news about his latest auto.

Bursting from the guts of the Eisenhower '50s, Presley had personified the belief that you could escape the destiny you were born into. For Presley, that meant escaping the poverty and social isolation of his Southern boyhood.

And yet celebrity creates its own traps. Throughout his subsequent career, Presley has lived in a cushy world of innocuousness that denied the passion of his original creation. If his best music pictured a world of combative freedom, his calculated stardom smothered it in commercial Plabum.

Although there was a flash of the old punk on Elvis' 1967 television special and his subsequent return to live performances, Elvis could never truly regain his past glories. Enshrined in a world devoid of struggle, his live shows quickly took the form of rock and roll evangelical events, with the King bringing the sacrament of the hound dog to the faithful.

Escape and ultimate liberation was the core of Elvis' early music, and his sellout to celebrity was as much a reflection of the times as of his own artistry. Col. Parker was quoted as saying that when he found Elvis, the singer had a million dollars' worth of talent, whereas he soon had the million dollars. And in the context of the American Dream, this was what being King was all about.

For a while at least, the rock culture of the '60s seemed to change all that. The Beatles made their millions, but they found themselves plugged into a mass media phenomenon that made Elvis' rise to fame seem like small potatoes.

While early Elvis fans had screamed at his live shows and affected his defiant posture, rock fans of the '60s looked to their heroes to define a new way of life. Naively utopian, he looked for rock to change the world as it had changed our perceptions of that world.

The final irony, of course, is that Elvis was right all along.

The Beatles didn't point us to a new world as much as to a rock culture that could sustain a $2-billion-a-year record industry.

And while it is still possible to ascribe higher ideals to certain pivotal artists, the industrialization of the culture denies the dewey-eyed romanticism of the '60s.

And so as Elvis stuffs himself into his jumpsuit for another night of nostalgic nonsense, he stands as a monument of both the culture-bending intensity of his early work and the larger-than-life role he assumed as if it were rightfully his.

If he threw more artistic potential away than most performers ever realize, that is simply part of the King's mystique. And if his shows have sunk to the level of sideshow self-parody, that night only because he has had a head start.

Lily Tomlin was a date at the New York State Supreme Court in Manhattan on Wednesday to tell why she has listed Zinka Milanov, the former opera star, as the understudy for her hit one-woman Broadway show. Miss Milanov, who starred for many years at the Metropolitan Opera, said she didn't see anything funny about the billing. She filed a $2.2 million damage suit saying that the use of her name caused her "shock, humiliation and embarrassment." At the Biltmore Theater, George Boyd, Miss Tomlin's stage manager, said Miss Milanov's name was included in the Playbill along with other names of well-known person admired by Miss Tomlin. "We have a one-woman show, so it's ludicrous that there could be a standby or an understudy," Boyd said. "The fact that the Playbill has certain standard things in itself is ludicrous and we tried to make it satirical and humorous." — New York Times

Public figures admit their alcoholism

San Diego (UPI) — Bill Burrud, producer of animal shows for television, says he saw strange creatures like pink elephants in his bedroom before he quit drinking. Actor Rod Cameron says he knew it was time to give up the bottle the moment he fell overboard while sailing.

Burrud and Cameron were among 27 prominent persons in a variety of fields — acting, business, politics, writing — who disclosed for the first time in public that they are recovered alcoholics.

They appeared at a news conference Saturday as part of the annual convention of the National Council on Alcoholism, called Operation Understanding II. In Operation Understanding I last year, astronaut Buzz Aldrin, television star Gary Moore and comedian Dick Van Dyke were among those who announced they were alcoholics.

Among those who stood up were actor Patrick O'Neal, a villainous television smoothie; James Kemper Jr., board chairman of Kemper Insurance Co.; Lee Grosscup, sportscaster and former quarterback for the New York Giants, John W. Stevens, commissioner of Indian affairs for the State of Maine, and Daniel D. Brewster, former U.S. senator from Maryland.

Carter roots reach 16th century London

Salt Lake City (UPI) — President Carter's roots stretch back to 16th century England along a colorful path strewn with an indentured servant, soldiers and slave holders — at least one of whom wasn't afraid to kill to protect his property.

Mormon Church genealogists said they have traced the Carter family name back 10 generations to John Carter, who was born in 1575 in London. Portions of the genealogical research were published in the Deseret News, the church-owned newspaper.

James M. Black, a senior researcher at the Mormon Genealogical Library, said the President's family history is filled with interesting people, including his great-great grandfather, Wiley Carter, who moved to the vicinity of Plains, Ga., in the 1850s.

Wiley shot a man in a dispute over the ownership of a slave in 1841 while he was living in a neighboring Georgia County, Black said. He stood trial for the killing, but was acquitted after witnesses said it was self-defense.

The sheriff was with him when the shooting occurred," said Black. "They had gone to this plantation to pick up the slave and apparently couldn't agree who the owner was."

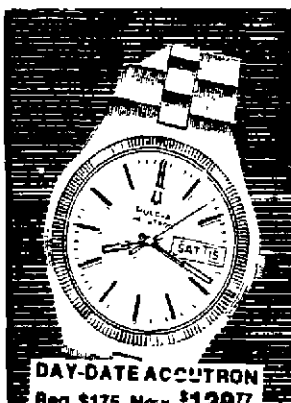

But the genealogist said Wiley moved out of the area 10 years later, apparently because there were still some bad feelings.

Wiley was also wealthy for his day, owning 2,200 acres of land and a lot of livestock. He left $22,000 cash to each of his 12 children when he died, Black said.

Wiley's son, Littleberry Walker Carter, was a private in the Confederate army and saw action at Boonsboro, the Wilderness, Spotsylvania Courthouse, Hanover Junction and Petersburg. His brothers also served.

Littleberry was the first member of the family to raise peanuts. His son, William (Billy) Archibald Carter, the President's grandfather, met a tragic end — he was shot to death in a fight over a desk in 1903.

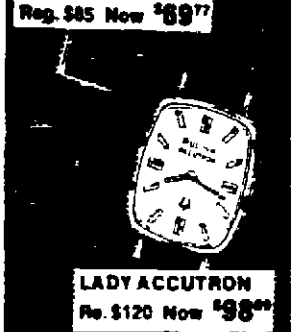

The first Carter in America was Thomas Carter, an indentured servant who arrived in the new world in 1635.

Zorinsky

of Utah, Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, Maine's Ed Muskie told him he almost quit during his first term.

"There are no signs or evidence Nebraska is being penalized or suffering because of my outspokenness," Zorinsky stresses. "No senator has said I should not have said what I did. No one is trying to isolate me. No one has given me the silent treatment, such as I had as mayor of Omaha."

But then that's not the way things work around here. Praise to one's face can sometimes conceal a knife ready to plunge into one's political back. It is interesting to note that only one — Muskie — of the senators cited by Zorinsky is among the powers in the senate. And Muskie, as is Zorinsky, is characterized by some as a bit on the erratic side.

A letter from national columnist Ann Landers, a native of Sioux City, Iowa, nicely puts into perspective, albeit unknowingly, Zorinsky's future problems: "You sound like my kind of guy... I'm sure it won't endear you to the hearts of many of your colleagues, but it certainly won't hurt you with Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public."

Publicity and senatorial pats on the back do not an effective senator make. In mocking the Senate and its leadership, Zorinsky has struck deep at the heart of the institution. What may play well back in Nebraska — and in the final analysis it's how Nebraskans pull the lever in the ballot booth that counts — doesn't play here.

And "here" is the reality of Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd of senior senators and committee chairmen who can make or break a freshman. If a survey of some two dozen senators, key staffers and veteran reporters is any indication, Zorinsky is being tolerated and is but a hair from going over the thin edge of being made an example by some powerful senators.

"If I have anything to do about that," growled one senator, "his record will be a big fat zero." The "record" is that of accomplishment, to be reported back to Nebraskans as pluses in the road to reelection, a step Zorinsky is still not certain he will take.

It's the little things that count, that will undo a senator: a bill is given short shrift, he has a hard time being recognized during Senate debate, the "sorry" excuses mount on co-sponsor requests, the slowness in responses on the part of committee staff members, the downgrading of advice to the leadership — all are elements of effectiveness.

It's not that establishment senators and the leadership mind Zorinsky's sounding off. They are tolerant of one another's things, recognizing that each must employ his own methods for reelection. But to bite the hand that feeds you, that's something else. To belittle the institution, that's something else again.

And Zorinsky has been biting the hands that have fed him. Robert Byrd's for example. And Hubert Humphrey, the aging but still popular and respected senator from Minnesota, still thinks he was double-crossed by Zorinsky.

The Nebraskan, seeing in Byrd the center of power, switched his majority leadership vote from Humphrey to the West Virginian. In return, Byrd has been Zorinsky's sponsor, placing him on the Democratic Steering Committee as well as on the Senate Agriculture Committee.

But Byrd wasn't exactly pleased that Zorinsky contacted the national media immediately after turning down his (Byrd's) personal invitation to join a Senate-House delegation to mainland China. He took it as a personal affront, according to one source.

"I have a higher priority than going to China," Zorinsky told the media, stressing his many commitments back in Nebraska. "Offhand, I can't think of one person in mainland China who voted for me in the last election."

In political Washington, it would have been okay had Zorinsky sounded off JUST to the Nebraska media. "Hell," said one staffer, "that's what it's all about, getting the ink in the hometown papers."

But you don't spank the leader on Washington turf.

"One more foulup like that," said one veteran reporter, "and that's it for the senator from Nebraska."

The depth of Byrd's feelings is pointed up by this. Asked at a recent press conference to comment on Zorinsky, Byrd, without a smile, terminated the session. "Thank you for attending," he said and turned on his heels.

The uncertainty is that the leadership and his colleagues do not know where Zorinsky will strike next or who will be his new target. In Washington and on Capitol Hill, the less uncertainty in an uncertain profession, the better.

James Abourezk, South Dakota Democrat: "He is probably one of the more free-wheeling senators in the Senate. He impresses me as one who doesn't care what he says or when he says it. He is not tied to any special interest groups — other than Arabian interest groups."

making changes in the Senate, his desire for more openness, to dislodge members based on their seniority. But I do not think he is effective because he goes into a tirade instead of a simple explanation of his position. He generates a feeling of being pompous."

Edward (Ted) Kennedy, Massachusetts Democrat: "He is very effective in his own circle of colleagues. He is much more liberal than I am. Perhaps that is why we vote on different sides of the issues."

Kennedy

Republicans plan to recruit minorities

Chicago (AP) — The Republican party adopted a $1.5 million rebuilding program Saturday and agreed to start from the ground up with minority recruitment and a new emphasis on local politics.

"I'm convinced that's the only way we can go," said Charles Black, named the party's political director last week, who will be in charge of most of the grass roots campaign.

"Without this kind of base, there is no way a political party can hope to achieve any long-range success," Black said.

The program, which has stirred some criticism from more conservative party members, passed with surprising ease as the Republican National Committee approved a $7.5 million 1977 budget which includes funds requested by party chairman Bill Brock to finance the recovery project. There was no discussion and no dissent as the budget passed by voice vote.

Basic elements in Brock's program include:

- An effort to recruit minorities, centered around targeted elections and promotion of minority candidates.
- A redirection of party efforts toward campaigns for state legislative seats over the next two years.
- An organizing campaign aimed at state and local parties.

Senator: ban junk food in school lunch program

Washington (UPI) — When "junk food" and nutritional school lunches vie for the attention of high school students, Congress should step in to help the youngsters make the right choice, a New Jersey senator said Saturday.

"I believe the federal government must act to insure and preserve the integrity of our nutrition programs in the schools," Sen. Clifford Case said.

"To me it makes no sense at all to have junk foods, loaded with sugar and empty calories, competing with the nutritious food in the school lunch program."

Case planned to introduce a measure Monday to eliminate language in existing law which allows the sale of competitive or "junk foods" in schools participating in the federally financed national school lunch program.

The program is administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture under the national school lunch act of 1972.

Lincoln's proposed Civic Center: Facts & Figures

The Civic Center concept calls for the renovation of Old City Hall and the Old Federal Building.

Bargain office space

It would provide needed city office space for Lincoln at a bargain rate. Since the County-City Building was constructed, the services required of City government have grown. This increase in personnel and services requires additional office space. The City is currently using as much of the Old Federal Building as fire codes will allow.

The theatre is a bonus

A 2,500 seat theatre would be housed within the large "U"-shaped opening on the south side of the Old Federal Building.

The theatre would host a variety of popular and preforming arts attractions throughout the year. 3,400 evening parking spaces exist within 2 blocks.

Cost is low by comparison

Comparison figures show that the cost of the Civic Center Complex is a bargain in 1977.

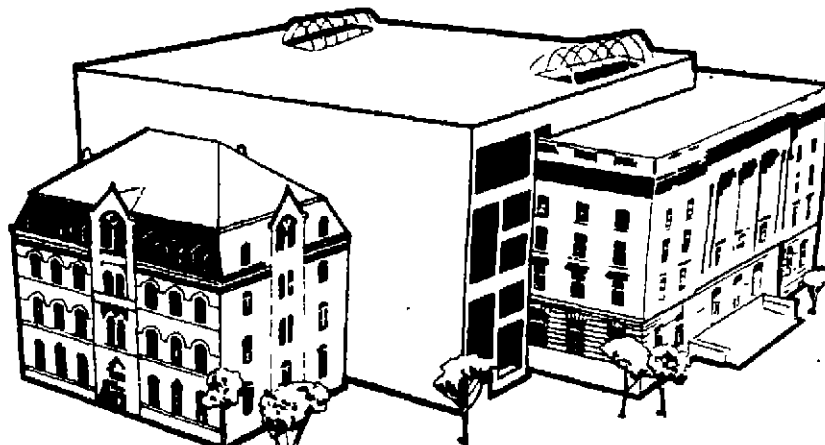

If the Civic Center concept is approved by the voters, the Old Federal Building will be a gift to the city. The total cost of completing the project is reliably estimated at or below $7 million, or $25.37 per square foot. This is less than half the cost of new construction.

Occupancy cost to the city for the entire complex would be $1.90 per square foot per year (maintenance, utilities, etc.) The cost of the new construction and renovation would be $3.27 per square foot per year during the period of the financing (20 years). This compares favorably to the cost of downtown rental space now ranging from $4.00 to $8.00 per square foot per year.

What would the Civic Center cost the taxpayer? Based on the average assessed tax valuation of homes in Lincoln, the average household would pay about 3 cents a day... and just one cent a day at the end of the financing period.

Other city needs will not be delayed

By funding the project through the issuance of general obligation bonds, the city's authorized spending limit would not be affected. Funds would not be diverted from other projects.

Agriculture's identity crisis

In the end we return to the central dilemma of much of American agriculture. Its identity crisis. Is agriculture fundamentally a business enterprise or a way of life? Each proposition in a democratic mass society has its rewards and negative considerations.

Just now Nebraska agriculture and that in most neighboring states is in a bad, bad way financially. Gov. Exon received impressive testimony from bankers that farmers — particularly grain producers — are acutely distressed. The roots of that pain go back some years.

The Nixon-Ford administrations matched farm policy with the historic ideology which sells best in rural areas — freedom. Republicans diminished government props and controls. In the timed circumstances, the results were great.

Enormous grain exports finally cleared away chronic surpluses. World demand held brisk. A lot of people made a lot of money.

With government verbally encouraging maximum production, businessmen farmers upped their investments. Increased debts were assumed. Industrialized agriculture, in the form of expensive and energy-intensive center pivot irrigation, even came to lands once regarded as essentially marginal. In 1976 alone — helped along by drouth worries — 3,198 additional center-pivot irrigation systems were installed in Nebraska. That raised the state total to 11,715 such systems.

But as production costs were either inflating or being additionally assumed, commodity prices turned static. Then sour. Good harvests depressed demand. Bankers advised Gov. Exon any number of Nebraska wheat farmers last summer decided the $3 a bushel price wasn't high enough. They gambled and held their crop.

And as has happened to other businessmen who make the wrong marketing decision, they have been brutally squeezed.

A new wheat harvest is about to start in Texas and move northward. Last week in Kansas, the elevator price for wheat fell under $2 a bushel. The country is jammed with old wheat, more than a three-year domestic supply. A large new crop is ahead.

In desperation, wheat will be channeled increasingly into livestock feed, Sen. Loran Schmit warned the Unicameral last week. That undercuts the traditional market for corn, as well as the price of corn, Schmit said. Then neither wheat nor corn prices would come anywhere near costs of grower production — and production made possible by credit.

We are back to overabundance. In Washington, a Democratic administration struggles to be financially hard-nosed on a new farm program, apparently unwilling to commit vast public tax support without some sort of production limitation.

To some extent, if we wish to see the truth plain, agriculture as a business made, collectively, some bum business judgments. Now it is living for those mistakes, as are others.

If American bias on agriculture tilted more to the concept that the production of food and fiber really involves a special way of life, and a way of life which should be politically and economically protected, we might do things somewhat differently.

There would be genuine safety nets to keep the decentralized enterprise from injury, and competent individual operators from going broke because of factors beyond their control. Yet those safety nets almost surely would be accompanied by devices to prevent enormous gains. As risk is buffered, so potential profit might be artificially curbed, too.

From what we learn of current thinking in Washington, there is no administration consensus about which basic direction American agricultural ought to head. What seems to be recognized is that everything has a price.

And if not now, then later.

Disclosure precedent set

The 1977 Lincoln City Council general election campaign had a pioneering coloration. Never before have candidates — all candidates — made statements about their personal financial interests.

Giving credit where it is due, Dorothy Walker voluntarily went public. Her reportage of tangible assets owned and approximate value came almost simultaneously with an editorial suggestion candidates provide disclosure declarations so voters could assess potential conflicts of interest.

The five remaining candidates responded affirmatively, although in no common way. Sue Bailey was exceptionally open. She even reported property in Florida willed to her by a relative, and its value.

Least forthcoming was Joe Hampton. Yet even Hampton, who owns considerable east Lincoln property and is a director of a bank in that neighborhood, told more than any candidate in previous municipal elections.

This is a healthy development. Hopefully a precedent has been set. Perhaps this precedent might be codified by the City Council soon into an ordinance, making future candidate disclosure mandatory, and elements of disclosure uniform.

For now, all six council candidates deserve public recognition for breaking the ice.

Taking UFO's seriously

Something funny's going on. Nebraska used to be almost a hotbed of UFO sighting. Lately there's been virtually nothing. All Nebraskans see in the skies these days are stars or birds or storm clouds. It's weird.

Seriously, unidentified flying objects deserve to be taken — well, seriously. And while UFO sightings may be down — not only in Nebraska but elsewhere — interest in the subject is in some ways increasing.

A new report published by Peter A. Sturrock, astrophysicist at Stanford's Applied Physics Department, contains some interesting information. Sturrock polled members of the American Astronomical Society, and of the 1,336 who replied, 80% said UFO's merit scientific study. Some said it emphatically.

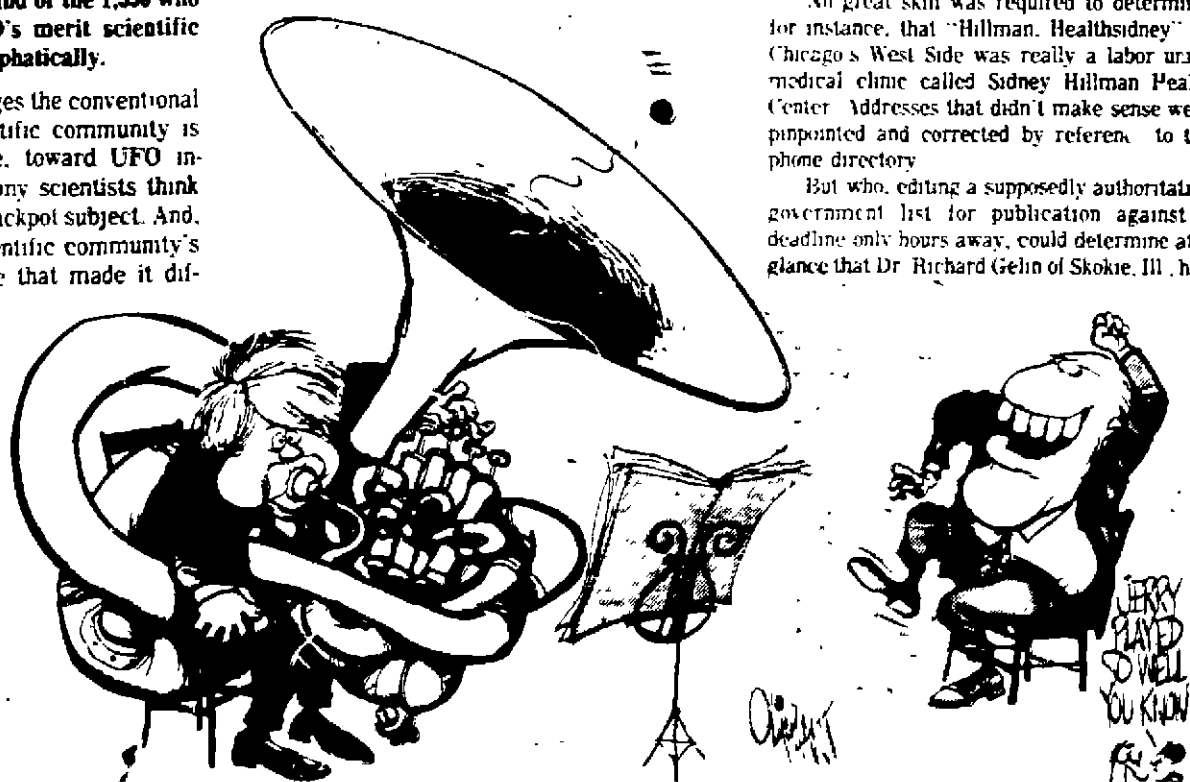

The survey challenges the conventional wisdom that the scientific community is skeptical, even hostile, toward UFO investigation because many scientists think the phenomenon is a crackpot subject. And, indeed, it was the scientific community's rather scoffing attitude that made it difficult for the University of Colorado study, under Edward Condon, to carry out its work a few years ago.

The Condon report remains suspect by many. Its conclusion, which reportedly not all who worked on the investigation shared, generally debunked the idea of something mysterious out there and contributed to ending government research in the field.

There's not much hope that the government will undertake new research into UFO's any time soon. But if scientists are showing a more open-minded interest in the subject, perhaps they can find a means for a new and proper investigation. UFO's remain one of the mysteries that tantalize mankind.

May 19, 1927: Charles A. Lindbergh takes "the Spirit of St. Louis" on a final test before his epic flight.

Lindy's plane lifted, the sun broke through and the field was blue with fresh violets . . .

By Dick Herman

Editorial Page Editor

This is kind of personal.

The other evening I glanced at the current "Saturday Review," an issue centered on a half-century of flight. Illustrating the cover is a portrait of Charles A. Lindbergh on the morning of his epochal 33-hour flight from New York to Paris — an angular, concentrated Nordic face, whose smooth planes are further defined by first sunlight.

Looking at that classic reproduction, a story associated with the great Mr. Justice Holmes involuntarily erupted from the jumbled human memory bank.

Near the end of his glorious life, Justice Holmes once instructed an awestruck law clerk: "Never forget that you once knew a man who knew a man who fought in the Revolution!" Thus was the thread of personal touch with mystic history projected into the future.

So with me, and Lindbergh.

We all know this city has an acute, permanent association with Charles Lindbergh. It was in Lincoln that he first went aloft and where he learned to fly. It was in Lincoln he made his first parachute jump, which was nearly fatal.

What is personally special, for me, is that I knew a woman who was there May 20, 1927, there at Roosevelt Field on Long Island that misty morning, there watching "Slim" Lindbergh climb into the flying gas tank known as "The Spirit of St. Louis," there praying (with several hundred others) as the plane lurched forward, there seeing one of mankind's truly historic quests — still in human scale — begin.

Faith Day died a few years ago.

Vivid still in my memory, however, and that of her sister, retired Nebraska Library Commission Executive Director Louise Nixon, is Mrs. Day's recollection of the takeoff at a time when she was young, America fresh and innocent and all things seemed possible. Precisely the Lindbergh synthesis.

Mrs. Day's husband, Stephen, was an early booster of flying. He'd been an Army aerial observer in World War I, the unprotected second-seat man. Men who flew then were a special, supportive fraternity of eagles.

In 1927, Stephen Day was employed by the publication "Aero Digest." The couple lived in Flushing, N. Y.

1927 was the year both America and France were fascinated at the thrilling contest stimulated by a $25,000 offer — who would be first to make a non-stop crossing of the Atlantic from New York to the shores of France, or vice versa. Several already had perished in the attempt.

Well, you know the story well enough. And if you don't, please check out Ken Davis's wonderful book, "The Hero." But reading about the event, and knowing, actually knowing, a sort of tangential participant . . . well, there is an extra pulse to the blood.

Stephen and Faith Day were particularly tense the rainy evening of May 19. Lindbergh, it was said, would try the flight the next morning, weather permitting. Takeoff was programmed at dawn for a successful transit which might last 40 hours, the Lord willing.

Unable to sleep, the Days left their apartment and went to the darkened, puddled field. "The Spirit of St. Louis" was towed from Curtiss Field to nearby, longer Roosevelt Field. Length of runway was vital. The Ryan monoplane had never hauled so great a fuel load. One earlier competitor for the $25,000 had crashed at the end of the field, his four-person craft unable to lift sufficiently.

Faith Day remembered how what was a rather noisy, excited crowd turned shivering-silent. At 7:52 a.m., with men pushing each wing, Lindbergh and "The Spirit of St. Louis" slowly started forward.

As if in common empathy, Mrs. Day said, the crowd sought to will the airplane upward and then, dear God, over those telephone wires.

Mrs. Day recalled that as Lindbergh took off, a shaft of sunlight arched through the low clouds "and the entire field was blue with fresh violets."

If the romance and epic character of that scene does not affect you, then, friend, you are made of limestone.

There are quivers here. Lindbergh's accomplishment was a single event which did, in fact, change the world. No individual person has done anything quite like it since.

Ex-astronaut Michael Collins has the happy job of directing the new National Air and Space Museum in Washington. That enchanting place displays such historic vehicles as the original Wright Brothers challenge to gravity, the X-1 and spacecraft which have circled the distant moon.

What machine is the source of the most intense interest for that unending tide of museum visitors, Mr. Collins?

"The Spirit of St. Louis."

Government bumbling undermines case for health insurance

By William Hines

If the American Medical Assn. had sneaked an agent provocateur into the Social Security Administration to discredit the government's ability to manage comprehensive national health insurance, he couldn't possibly have improved on the destructive job that Social Security itself has done in the last six weeks or so.

As is well known by now, the Health, Education and Welfare Department released a list from Social Security in mid-March purporting to name physicians who hit the Medicare jackpot for $100,000 or more in 1975.

The ink was not dry on the next morning's headlines before outraged doctors started phoning editors to lodge complaints.

It quickly turned out that the list was shot through with errors — egregious errors, shocking errors, not just trivial errors that could be plausibly explained by a disclaimer on the list's cover sheet about possible inaccuracies.

Minor errors are always present in lists, and careful journalists are usually able to cull out the more obvious ones.

No great skill was required to determine, for instance, that "Hillman, Healthsideney" on Chicago's West Side was really a labor union medical clinic called Sidney Hillman Health Center. Addresses that didn't make sense were pinpointed and corrected by reference to the phone directory.

But who, editing a supposedly authoritative government list for publication against a deadline only hours away, could determine at a glance that Dr. Richard Gelin of Skokie, Ill., had actually received only $21,133 from Medicare in 1975 and not $143,704 as the Social Security Administration had stated?

All over the country the same scene was being played out: Doctors calling newspaper offices, editors asking reporters to check out the complaints, reporters calling regional or national headquarters of Social Security to ask, in varying degrees of politeness, what the hell was going on.

At first the Social Security responses rang true enough: These are errors we don't understand, we're going back to the computers and to the regional offices to check them out, we'll try to get back to you as soon as we can.

"As soon as we can" stretched first from hours to days, then to "a week for so" and then "certainly by the end of the month (the month in the case being not April but March)."

April Fool's Day came, and Passover, and Good Friday and Easter Sunday, and still the errors were neither corrected nor explained.

This reporter, who had been in on the story since the beginning March 13, wanted to wrap it up, or at least get an interim explanation, before leaving on an assignment of several weeks' duration in Europe.

My hopes were dashed on both counts. At Social Security headquarters in Baltimore, I was told there was "no way" there would be a corrected list before the first of May at the earliest, and my request for an interview with the agency's No. 1 official for an explanation was turned down on the ground that "we really have nothing to add at this time."

So there the matter stands, roughly a month and a half after the Social Security Administration released a list that accurately reflects nothing except that agency's incompetence.

It doesn't hold water for the government to complain — as it has done in recent weeks — that it was forced to produce the list in a hurry under the Freedom of Information Act. If government data are that shabbily kept, the sooner — and the more — we know about it, the better.

Grievous damage has been done. And the real disservice has been done to the average American "health care consumer" who is caught between relatively static earning power and medical costs that are escalating out of control.

Maybe Social Security is so fouled up that it is incapable of running a national health care program (or anything else).

But what this ought to mean is that Social Security should be straightened out and taught to fly right, not that the country should be forced to jump along any further under health-care conditions that prevail today.

A taint of greed that will linger to the grave

By James J. Kilpatrick

A month or so ago, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare released some titillating figures: "Approximately 400 physicians raked in more than $100,000 from Medicare payments in 1975, and 16 of them ripped off taxpayers for upwards of $250,000."

The release, to be sure, did not use such verbs as "raked in" and "ripped off," but these were the clear implications.

HEW's facts and figures were wrong. The errors were numerous and massive. On the 16 top rip-off artists, those identified with earnings of $250,000 or more, HEW had its facts wrong as to 14.

The American Medical Association managed to query 206 of the 407 identified physicians. It turned out HEW was wrong on 135 of them.

Alas, as all of us in the news business know, the truth will never catch up with the falsehood. Doctors who have been effectively libeled will go to their graves with a taint of greed clinging to them.

The whole business is regrettable. Individual doctors are hurt. Their profession suffers. We of the press gain nothing, we were unwitting conduits of error. HEW's reputation for credibility is damaged. Who will believe the next set of government facts?

Carter's first 100 days:
furious pace, incongruity

By Joseph Kraft
Government on the run characterized the first 100 days of the Carter administration. In substance as well as style, there was furious activity.

But systematic incongruity developed between the tone, which emphasized a new departure, and the policy. For in policy matters, the administration has moved steadily away from the high rhetorical idealism of campaign promise to serious and more conventional approaches.

The selling of the President from the White House picked up on Jan. 20 as if the political campaign had never ended. By an imaginative variety of different devices Carter has come across as a man in direct touch with the whole public.

The impact of his symbolic actions has undoubtedly been favorable to the President. He stands extraordinarily high in personal popularity and general approval polls. As pollster Peter Hart has shown, Carter has built as President something he never had during the campaign, and that both Ford and Nixon lacked — a large number of voters strongly attached to his leadership, "a sizeable core constituency."

In building popularity, Carter has tended to draw heavily on folk wisdom. He has exploited public suspicions of Washington, government inefficiency and big interests. He has appealed to the glib notion that imparts a special virtue to politicians who pretend to be against politics.

Set against that anti-political tone, and a campaign which emphasized themes more than issues, the sheer volume of the administration's policy initiatives is staggering.

On the domestic side, the administration has brought forth an energy program, packages for economic stimulation and containing inflation, a new approach to water reclamation, a farm program and legislation for government reorganization.

In foreign policy, Carter has opened major new initiatives in arms control, the Near East, human rights and nuclear proliferation. He has set in motion the undoing of wrongs previously done in Cuba, Vietnam and Panama.

But even in the brief period of 100 days, the direction of the Carter program has not been steady. There have been zigs and zags in all things, and on major items a pattern of compromising with reality to the point of almost total turnabout.

Soviet-American relations on arms control provide the most dramatic example. The President started by pushing, with maximum public fanfare, a proposal for deep cuts that went way beyond the Vladivostok guidelines negotiated by Henry Kissinger in 1974. The Russians reacted stiffly. At home inevitably pressure built for a new binge on military spending.

The pressures caused Carter to retreat. Now the arms negotiations are going forward on the old basis. The talks are secret. The deep cut proposals are not the basis of discussion. The starting point is the Vladivostok accord.

Similarly in economic policy, Carter started off with a program that emphasized early stimulus to bring down quickly an unemployment figure running above 7%. To contain the inflationary impact of stimulus, he wanted a direct program including constraints on wages and prices.

But the pressure of events — and interests represented in Congress — caused him to withdraw the stimulus package. The same pressures yielded an anti-inflationary package without significant constraints on wages and prices. Carter has thus been pushed back close to the old Ford policy of using slow economic growth to fight inflation.

Compromise with reality is in the nature of things, as is the transition of new boys to old boys. Still the return to business as usual in the Carter administration finds deeper roots than those threadbare verities.

I think new approaches and good ideas are going by the board because the Carter style has not been introduced to the Carter substance. The credits built up by public relations are not transferable as credits for policies that go much beyond the scope of vulgar prejudice. It is in the price paid for being a preacher rather than a teacher, a simplifier, not, in David Riesman's phrase, a complexifier.

LB518 has lots of merit

In the days when personal belongings were being taxed, it often occurred that some women conveniently left their diamond rings at home on assessment day or perhaps took them off under the table while being assessed. Wouldn't it have been better to have charged them (or their husbands, in this case) a higher sales tax in the first place? That way the entire tax could have been paid once and for all, and the purchaser wouldn't have to keep "buying" it as he uses it.

While it's almost certain that other taxes will rise once LB518 becomes law, there are so many factors that make the taxes it seeks to eliminate unreasonable that we believe the measure should be passed. And we can't forget that the people once voted to set aside the taxes the bill will eliminate.

Duplicating farm research

The Center for Rural Affairs at Walthill... now has a special grant to study energy use on farms.

Some of the critics of present-day agriculture believe the universities and their researchers should no longer be "trusted" since their work is aided by large agribusiness firms. And the same institutions field criticism for not having "done enough" to preserve the family farm. Yet all their research has helped to make farming units more productive, whether large or small, and to lower the risks involved.

That these institutions should now be ignored or their work duplicated is wrong in terms of expense and public policy.

Saturday mail important

Most of us in the newspaper business maintain some altruistic considerations about the job we do. It is more than a job that pays us enough to buy bread, clothes and keep a roof over our heads. We think it is important that the people at least have the opportunity to find out what is happening in the outside world.

Loss of Saturday mail delivery would put a serious crimp in the ability of rural subscribers to promptly receive the news of the day. Without that information it makes it tougher for all of us to actively participate in the governmental process which under our system is dependent upon an informed and caring public.

Save energy: stop forced busing

There are buses driving from one end of Omaha to the other (meeting one another in the process), transporting youngsters to schools far away from home. Previously, of course, these youngsters walked to their neighborhood school.

Multiply the Omaha experience by the number of times it is being repeated throughout the country and you get some idea of the extent of waste of gasoline resources which has resulted. We think elimination of forced busing should be at the top of the nation's energy saving ideas.

Error of logic

Regarding the lead editorial "Misapplied, deceiving phrases" (Sunday Journal and Star, April 24), you commit an error of logic by supporting a plan which further regulates industry.

That error is failing to recognize that the freedom you so blithely deny industry is part of that freedom you defend when your right to publish is attacked. A freedom denied anyone threatens the freedom of everyone.

The freedom industry wants is to make money. The freedom you defend is an ethical principle. But, money is the tangible expression of that principle you defend.

Sterilization

I was pleased to see the article on sterilization (Sunday Journal and Star, April 17) and I hope it was informative to women considering contracthe laparoscopic tubal ligation. The bill was that high — because of one overnight in the hospital — but my insurance covered the bulk of the cost. It's important for women who are considering a laparoscopy to check into insurance coverage. Many policies will cover the operation.

Second, and perhaps less important, the laparoscopic tubal ligation involves only two — not three — incisions. These incisions are so small they are closed by only one or two stitches and covered with a band-aid. That is why the laparoscopy is called the band-aid operation.

Government heads dismissed

New Delhi, India (UPI) — Prime Minister Morarji Desai Saturday dismissed the governments of nine states, dissolved their local legislative assemblies, and called for new elections. The action, delayed for 24 hours when acting President B. D. Jatti temporarily refused to sign a proclamation dismissing the opposition controlled state governments, is expected to ensure the victory of Desai's nominee for the August presidential elections.

Egyptians deported from Libya

Cairo, Egypt (UPI) — Nearly 400 Egyptians who worked in Libya arrived in Cairo Saturday, expelled by Col. Moammar Khadafi along with all Syrian, Sudanese and Palestinian doctors in his nation, the Middle East News Agency said. The agency said many of the 397 deportees worked for a construction firm building projects for the Libyan army. About 600 Egyptians, out of an estimated 200,000 working in Libya, have been deported in the past two days.

"President Carter's recent statements and his administration's policy are not a just or proper basis for a settlement of the Middle East crisis."

Nuke protesters march on plant

Seabrook, N.H. (AP) — Carrying backpacks and sleeping bags, more than 2,500 men and women defied no trespassing signs Saturday and staged a sit-in at the site of a proposed nuclear power plant on New Hampshire's seacoast.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson, who came to the site in the morning, told reporters no arrests would be made as long as the protesters did not try to penetrate a fenced-in 40-acre area where construction has been underway.

Leaders of the Clamshell Alliance, a loosely-knit coalition of anti-nuclear power groups mainly from the Northeast, said they would not try to breach the fenced-in area. Clamshell leaders said they would stop anyone who tried.

More than 300 policemen and a small contingent of National Guard troops stood by as the demonstrators marched onto the site.

There was no violence. State police said the crowd numbered about 800, but other observers said there were more than 1,000 demonstrators.

Led by a young man playing bagpipes, the demonstrators, some from as far away as New Mexico, went onto the site in two lines chanting, "No Nukes! No Nukes!" and marched down a mile-long access road, some of them to within 75 yards of the fenced-in area.

GAO questions missile totals

Washington (UPI) — The Pentagon may be developing more types of cruise missiles than it needs, a congressional report says.

The classified report by the General Accounting Office (GAO) also says the missiles have not been included in periodic Pentagon reports which provide cost figures on major weapons systems, although $5.1 billion in involved.

Cruise missiles are small, pilotless jet planes with nuclear or conventional warheads that can find their way to targets with high accuracy. They have been an issue in SALT negotiations with Moscow.

The GAO said six versions of the missiles were being considered and "serious questions arise about the need for employing some versions."

It recommended defense

Secretary Harold Brown "reevaluate the role for cruise missiles to assure that continued development is directed toward specific military requirements that relate to mission needs."

GAO, noting two of six Air Force test missiles failed, also took issue with continued development of both Air Force and Navy types of missiles.

Excerpts of the report were made available by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who is seeking more facts from Deputy Defense Secretary Charles Duncan.

In addition to a Navy

Tomahawk missile use with a nuclear warhead against ground targets and one for anti-ship use, the report said there were two ground-launched versions of cruise missiles for use against land and sea targets and two Air Force types, one carried inside bombers and another "stretched" for greater range.

Knowledgeable defense officials denied six different missiles were involved. They said the Navy versions share many of the same components and no decision has been made to go ahead with a ground-launched version.

Coney Island to regain its glory

(c) Newhouse News Service

New York — Coney Island, once the queen of New York City beaches, may regain its faded glory thanks to a large infusion of federal funds.

On many a hot Sunday of yore, as many as two million people — thick as grains of sand — jammed onto the Atlantic Ocean beach to cool off and enjoy its famed amusements.

There was Steeplechase Park, the stomach-wrenching Cyclone, the Parachute Jump and Nathan's "Famous" home of the original Coney Island hot dog.

Coney Island was the watering spot for New York City's masses. It was memorialized in Broadway shows, songs and Hollywood movies.

In recent years, however, the grand dame of beaches has become shabby. The crowds still come but it just isn't the same.

The boardwalk is in need of repair. The amusement area has lost its towering Parachute Jump, which with age became too dangerous to operate. The Cyclone still speeds up and down its precipitous tracks, bringing shrieks of joy and screams of panic as the rider's stomach threatens to somersault.

Nathan's is still there, now the center of a rapidly-expanding chain of Coney Island restaurants.

Coney Island needs parking lots, new sidewalks and restrooms. The city closed down the beach's limited restroom facilities because it didn't have the money to staff and maintain them.

The City Planning Commission says it has a $1.55 million federal Housing and Urban Development Dept. open space grant and will match it with a $450,000 Community Development appropriation and the equivalent of $1.1 million in land the city owns.

Thus, more than $3 million will be available to restore Coney Island to its erstwhile elegance.

At least that's the plan of the city fathers.

But don't change your vacation plans and make reservations for the Baghdad by the Sea beach this year. The project is only in the planning stage.

Public hearings must be held before the local community board.

Property owners will be seeking answers to questions, about assessments and services the city would provide with the improvements.

Ghost kicks farmer out of farmhouse

By Michael Miner
(c) Chicago Sun-Times

Chicago — The relationship between Charles Myers and his remodeled farmhouse in northern Wisconsin has fallen apart. Myers does not know why.

With a heavy heart he placed this ad in The Chicago Sun-Times.

WISCONSIN-Holcombe, 80 acres, mod. house, barn, silo, etc. HAUNTED FARM
I've had enough, sac, $60,000 987-5171

Myers, a tax consultant, bought the farm in 1972. He began hearing noises when he started going up there after the remodeling was done.

"In the beginning I ignored it," Myers said. "The last time I was up there was March 12. This last time it got the better of me. I heard a noise in the kitchen. It sounded just like someone messing around with the pan I had on the stove. It was the middle of the night."

"Later on I woke up because the light in the living room was on. I don't know how that light could have been on. I know it was off when I went to bed."

It has always been that way between Myers and his farmhouse. No one single crisis. Just a lot of nagging little things — strange noises in the kitchen or the attic, a mysterious light — that piled up and up.

"I've never mentioned it to any of my family members or anyone, because basically I didn't want anyone to think I was hearing things," he said.

Myers said, "You tell someone the light was on and the normal response is, 'Hell, you must have forgotten to turn it off.'"

Myers, 43, said his ad has drawn a brisk response. "A couple asked me if there would be any harm that would come to them," he said. "I explained these are things that happen to me, but it's never happened to anyone else. The only conclusion I can draw is that maybe I'm just not meant to be up there."

He said he doubts that his farmhouse resents that it was remodeled, but he added:

"No one is liked by everyone. Or everything. Maybe the house doesn't like the way I remodeled it. Maybe it wishes I had made it a different color. Maybe it doesn't like the choice of my carpeting. Or the paneing."

"I don't know how a person can ascertain it. There's nobody to ask."

One thing is certain. Myers did not harbor a secret grudge against his farm.

"I enjoyed going up to the farm and looking at the 30 acres and saying, 'Hey, this is mine!' To look out the window and say 'From here as far as I can see is mine!' It's a nice feeling. I got a very low mortgage on the place."

Although he somehow failed with the farm in Holcombe, Wis., Myers is not done with farms forever.

"I don't have any particular farm in mind, but I'm sure I'll wind up buying a farm again," he said.

RE-ELECT JOHN ROBINSON TO CITY COUNCIL

John Robinson believes in the things you believe in. Strong, livable neighborhoods. A planned, growing Lincoln. And voice in city government for you.

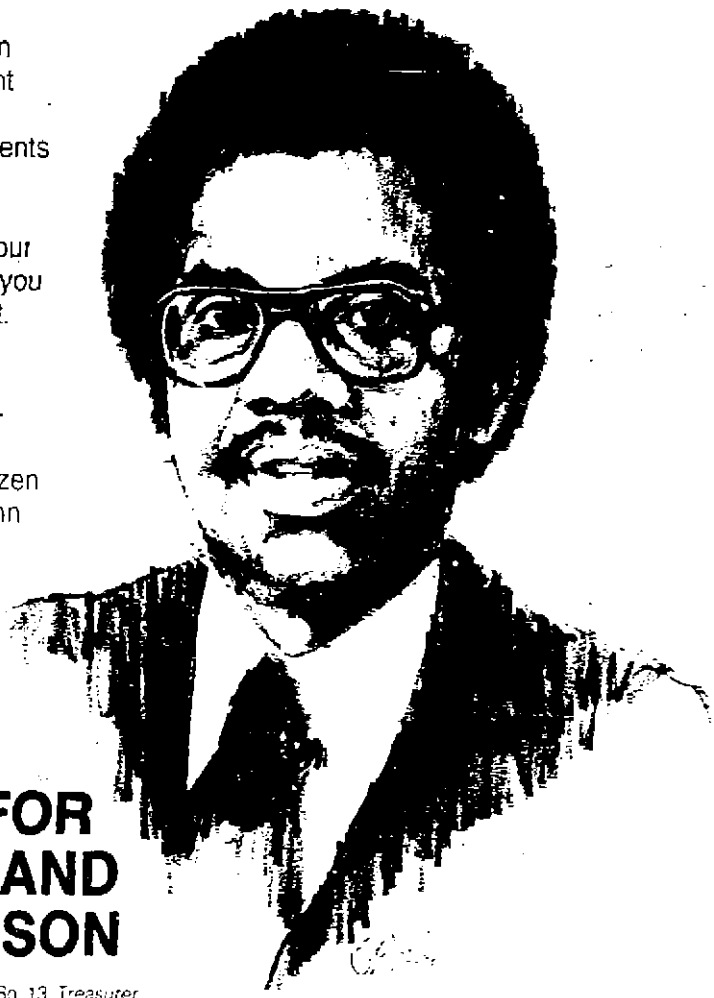

The quality of life in Lincoln depends largely on where we live. That's why John Robinson is fighting to preserve strong, livable neighborhoods. Because they are where we live. And where our children will grow up.

In the years to come we'll need more jobs, homes, schools and streets. That's why John Robinson has been working for a planned, balanced Lincoln. So it can be the kind of city you want to live in.

A city government represents people. Not interests or property. That's why John Robinson has worked for four years to make people like you part of our city government. So our priorities can be determined by our people.

Vote for strong neighborhoods. Vote for a livable Lincoln. Vote for broad citizen representation. Vote for John Robinson. And help make this the kind of city we all want to live in.

A little girl, a rapist and justice

By Roger Simon
Chicago Sun-Times

Comentary

Chicago — Linda looked very small on the witness stand. She was only 8 and was dwarfed by the hard, wood chair she sat on. The judge, stern-faced and black-robed, loomed high above her on his bench.

Scott Arthur, the prosecutor, spoke to her gently but firmly. Linda, he said, "the last question I ask you is, when this man here came up to you, what did he say to you?"

Linda looked at the man across the courtroom. He was about 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighed about 200 lbs. In 1971 he was found guilty of manslaughter. But the judge gave him probation and put him back on the street. In 1972 he was arrested for attempting to rape a small girl, but the girl's parents wouldn't let her testify and he was let go. And now there was Linda.

Linda (not her correct name) answered the prosecutor's question "He said if I didn't go with him he was going to stick me in the neck with a knife," she said.

Uncommon scene

Linda told the court how she went with him to the empty lot and what he did to her there. It is not a common scene in an American court. Children are not usually allowed to testify, either by their parents or by the courts. And that is why they are such easy targets for rapists and child molesters.

But every now and then something goes right. Sometimes there is the right combination of police and prosecutors and parents. And sometimes there are little girls like Linda.

Linda is a talkative, inquisitive child. At 8 she would pepper her parents with all kinds of questions. And her parents would always answer. At 8 she knew what sex meant. And she knew what rape meant.

Linda's family was a deeply religious one. They went four times a week to church, where Linda's father was a preacher. And after what happened on that day last May, they would need all the comfort their religion could give them.

'Don't worry'

Linda wore her dark-plaid skirt that day and her light blouse. She usually ate lunch at school but when her mother dropped her off in the morning, they found she had forgotten it. "Don't worry," her mother told her. "You can come home for lunch."

So Linda did and now she was on her way back to school, skipping down the pleasant streets of her Chicago suburb. A man appeared at her side. Towering over her, he took out a knife and told her he would "stick" her if she didn't follow him.

He took her by the hand and walked down the street. A woman would remember the strange sight of the very large man and the very little girl. She would later identify him in court.

The man took Linda to a weed-choked field. This is what Linda said in court.

Arthur. When you got to that grassy field, what, if anything, did that man do?

Linda. He told me to lay down in the weeds.

Arthur. What if anything, did he do to you?

Linda. He took one of my shoes off and my socks and my panties.

When the man was done raping Linda, he told her to walk away and not look back. Linda went to school in what a doctor later testified, must have been tremendous pain.

After a while she asked the teacher if she could go home. At home she did not tell her parents what had happened, but went straight to bed. They did not know it, but she was already beginning to bleed heavily.

A neighbor appeared at the door of Linda's house. She told Linda's mother to be watchful because a man had been seen molesting children in the neighborhood. Linda's mother became alarmed and asked Linda what had really happened. Linda began to cry and told her mother what the man had done to her. The police were called. Linda was taken to the hospital.

Lynching wanted

The man was arrested. Linda picked his picture out of a group of 10. A crowd of more than 100 angry parents gathered at the police station. They wanted a lynching," Arthur said.

In most cases, things would end there. Most parents will not allow their children to be humiliated by testifying in court. And many courts will not even let children testify.

And then there were the details of Linda's attack. What happened to her was brutal, almost beyond description. After the attack, she was taken into surgery where certain parts of her body had to be reconstructed because of the savagery of the rape.

Linda testified at the preliminary hearing, after the judge asked her 10 pages of questions to determine whether she was a competent witness. But by then, Linda's parents had had enough. Why should they put their daughter through the agony of a trial?

Arthur and his partner, Nicholas Faklis, persuaded them to proceed with a trial. The prosecutors told them something to make them change their minds.

Man found guilty

A short while ago, Linda took the stand. The trial lasted six days. The jury was out for 40 minutes. And it found the man guilty.

The man will be sentenced in a few days. Linda will not be in the courtroom. She will be in school, living a normal life. She will be trying to forget what happened on that day in May.

To fill a job or to find one.

For more than 40 years, Nebraska Job Service — it was called the "unemployment office" in earlier times — has worked with employers and job seekers to meet their needs.

to the ultimate benefit of all Nebraskans. Nebraska Job Service is financed by tax dollars collected from employers. There are no fees — for job placement or qualified people-finding. Nor are there any restrictions or limitations because of color, sex or creed. Only ability to do the job counts at Job Service.

Nebraska Job Service wants to work for you whether you need a job or want a job filled. Give us a call. We'll work with you.

There are 18 Job Service offices in Nebraska. Check with the nearest one — or check the Yellow Pages under Employment Agencies.

Betty Wilhelm, Personnel Officer
University of Nebraska Personnel Office
When we have job openings, I send all of them to Job Service to be listed. Job Service sends me qualified people — some of whom have been here before, but no jobs are open at that time. I like this kind of service.

Phil Brewer, Personnel Officer
Cashman-OMI, Lincoln
We do a lot of government contract work, so all of our jobs must be listed with Job Service. We've hired a big improvement in service over the last few years. Screening is better. We're happy with the qualified people they send us.

Jim Tisdale, Corporate Personnel Officer
Miller and Payne
Each Monday Job Service checks with us for job openings. They do it for quite a few other Lincoln businesses, too. It works well. We generally like and hire the people they send us for interviews. Job Service does a good job for us.

David Frost interviewing Richard Nixon.

Profit potential swelling for Nixon's TV interviews

By Les Brown
(c) New York Times
New York — Largely on the strength of an eleven-hour public television blitz — which includes the promise of cover stories this week in Time, Newsweek and TV Guide and a 20-minute segment on CBS's "60 Minutes" Sunday night — David Frost's series of televised interviews with former President Nixon has gained both additional stations and advertising support the last few days.
The special network for the broadcasts has been swelled to 155 outlets with the addition of 28 stations last week, and Alpo Dog Food and Coleco Toys have joined the roster of advertisers leaving two 30-second spots still to be sold nationally in each program.
According to sources close to the Frost-Nixon project, there is no longer a question of whether the telecasts will meet their costs but rather of how large the profits will be. The sale of the remaining spots

Carter says he provides Nixon with secret data

Washington (UPI) — President Carter is providing Richard Nixon with secret State Dept. and CIA data on U.S. relations with other nations, and says Nixon has a "perfect" attitude toward him.
Nixon has written "several letters" and the two men have exchanged telephone calls, Carter told a group of broadcast and news directors.
"His attitude toward me has been perfect."
He has said he didn't want to intrude, but that he was always available, Carter added.
The President made the comments during a Friday meeting with the news executives. A transcript was released Saturday afternoon.

Referring to former President Gerald Ford, Carter said: "We keep both him and President Nixon informed with regular briefings from the State Dept. and the CIA on secret, unpublicized, interrelationships between us and other governments."
Carter also said Nixon, who resigned the presidency in disgrace, has promised that if he disagreed with the administration "he would always do it privately and in a constructive way, that he would never be critical of what I did in public."

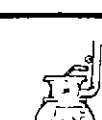

With the national advertising that has already been sold, at the rate of $125,000 a commercial minute, the four programs will have gross revenues of $2 million against about $1.5 million in expenses.
In addition to Alpo and Coleco, the network advertisers are Greyhound Bus Lines, Datsun, Weed-Eater, Hilton Hotels and Radio Shack.
The agreement with Nixon permits the televising of seven hours worth of tape from the 28 hours recorded during April with the former President at his home in San Clemente, Calif. Since the four telecasts will consume only six hours of air time, Frost's company has the right to create yet another one-hour special with Nixon from the leftover footage.
In his story on "60 Minutes" Sunday night, Mike Wallace reports from unidentified sources that Nixon is to receive 10% of the profits from the programs, in addition to his guaranteed $600,000 fee for the interviews with Frost.
Ratings as well as publicity will figure importantly in whether or not the remaining spots in the Nixon telecasts are sold.
Frost's own prediction is that his programs will draw approximately 30% of the audience. That is the television industry's measure of a moderately successful network program.
That share of audience may not be easily achieved in some cities, however, since the major networks are countering with fairly potent fare on Wednesday night. Scheduled opposite the Nixon interview on NBC is a 1971 John Wayne Movie, "Big Jake," and on CBS the premiere showing of a 1975 film with Peter Fonda, "Race With the Devil." Both films start at 9 p.m. against the final hour of the Frost-Nixon program.

Nixon 'kept one jump ahead'

(c) New York Times
Washington. — More than a year before he resigned the presidency in disgrace, Richard M. Nixon was so preoccupied with the Watergate matter and aware of the risk of his impeachment that he spent "days on end trying to extricate himself from the scandal."
"We kept one jump ahead of the (expletive) sheriff," he complained to H. R. Haldeman, then the White House chief of staff, in late April of 1973, some 16 months before Nixon abdicated the presidency.
The disclosure of the former president's intense involvement in the Watergate cover-up, beginning as early as three days after the June 17, 1972, burglary at the Democratic party's national headquarters, emerged Saturday in a series of White House tape transcripts never before made public.
The material was made available to The New York Times following widespread speculation that Nixon had refused, for the most part, to concede his role in the Watergate affair in telecast interviews with David Frost.
The transcripts obtained Saturday showed that Nixon was intimately familiar with each stage of the unsuccessful attempt to contain the spread of the Watergate taint from reaching, ultimately, into the Oval Office.
Three days after the Watergate burglary, Nixon told Charles W. Colson, his former special counsel, that he was involved in a "dangerous job" as they discussed the possibility that federal investigators would be satisfied to place the blame on the seven defendants arrested the night of the break-in. Nixon used the word "stonewall" which later would become a catchword in the Watergate case, for the first time in that June 20, 1972, White House conversation.
The extent and intensity of Nixon's involvement in the cover-up planning was illustrated vividly in several recorded conversations in April 1973, when John W. Dean 3rd, the White House legal counsel, was preparing to detail his knowledge to Justice Dept. investigators.

Biological revolution nearing as energy sources give out

Berkeley, Calif. (AP) — Our planet Earth can't stop at some celestial service station to fill up again on oil.

When the original underground tanks run dry, the oil-energy journey is over. That may be only 25 years from now.

Where, then, will we get the fertilizers, plastics, wash-and-wear clothing, pesticides, medicines, dyes, paints and thousands of other products now made from chemicals in petroleum?

Some scientists are betting on bacteria, molds and fungi as one vital source.

"A biological revolution is coming. In the next 30 years or so, biology will replace chemistry in importance in this country," say Drs. Ronald E. Cape and Peter J. Farley.

They are president and vice president respectively of Cetus Corporation here, a company already engaged in pushing along just such a revolution. In one success, they increased the annual yield of a major antibiotic by 50% by finding a new "bug" that does a better job of making that drug.

While oil can be used only once, microbes renew themselves, some every 20 minutes, while producing various chemicals. Only a few organisms cause disease — the vast majority to do useful things in nature.

"The business of a bug is to make a living," Dr. Farley says. "They 'eat' whatever is around them. There's an infinite variety of microbes, and they are phenomenal chemical factories. Some use and concentrate uranium; others silver or lead, still others digest lining in wood."

"We supply them with a kind of plush hotel, feed them nutrients, keep them warm, and let them do their thing, namely to grow and produce chemicals of interest to us."

Numerous scientists feel that microbes can tackle almost any task that synthetic organic chemistry can do, if you find the right organisms.

It is tedious work with few successes, Dr. Farley says. Perhaps only one in 10,000 mutations is a new blueprint for improvement, such as the yield of an antibiotic. A human team, screening up to 100 organisms a day would spend an average of 100 working days to find one desired reward.

Cetus has developed an automatic, miniaturized machine — it still fills a small building — that can screen 20,000 or more microbes every 7 to 10 days, Dr. Cape says.

The automated laboratory is inspired by Dr. Donald Glaser's work in designing computers and other equipment to analyze organisms for genetic changes. Dr. Glaser, of the University of California here, won a Nobel Prize in physics for discovery of the bubble chamber to detect subatomic particles. He then switched his career to molecular genetics.

He and another Nobelist — Dr. Joshua Lederberg, a biologist at Stanford University School of Medicine — are consultants to Cetus.

The springboard for a biological revolution is all of the knowledge of genetics and biology learned in the last 20 years, including understanding now of the exquisite genetic code of life, says Dr. Farley.

But industry has done little with it, except for the pharmaceutical industry making antibiotics and giving Cetus assignments to find better strains.

Numerous major companies are taking new interest in microbes and biology, Cape and Farley say — industries such as food, chemicals, energy, mining, pollution control, paper and milling.

Survey: average political loser was male, 46, underfinanced

Washington (UPI) — A portrait of political losers drawn from a survey of 1976 congressional candidates shows the average contender was a middle-aged man waging an underfinanced first campaign.

The survey was taken for the Federal Election Commission by Decision Making Information and Hart Research Associates — two companies at opposite ends of the political spectrum — to probe candidates' views on federal election laws and the political process.

Polsters Richard Wirthlin and Peter Hart in releasing the report last week said they were surprised at the information they turned up about the candidates themselves.

Probably the most important finding is that seven out of 10 candidates did not win the office they sought. About six out of 10 did not even come close to winning office, they said.

The candidates differed considerably from popular impression or from the average characteristics of the total society, the study said.

They tended to be running for federal office for the first time overwhelmingly they were men; they tended to be in their middle years; they consisted more of Democrats than Republicans, though one of eight were independents, and most of them lost.

The poll was taken of 850 candidates or their campaign managers, a representative sample of the 2,150 persons whose names appeared on the ballot for House or Senate races last year.

Some of the findings:

- Democrats outnumbered Republican candidates, 50 to 37.
- Thirteen per cent were independents or minor party candidates.
- seventy-one per cent of all candidates were losers.
- ninety-three per cent of incumbents were re-elected.
- women were 8 1/2 per cent of the total number of candidates but only 3 1/2 per cent got elected, none to the Senate.
- the median age was 46.
- The median age of winners was 48; of losers 40.
- the candidates spent little by modern standards. Median spending was $24,000. Winners spent a median $86,000 and losers $13,000.

Hundreds wait in line for measles vaccinations

Los Angeles (AP) — Hundreds of parents and anxious youngsters waited in lines up to three miles long Saturday for measles vaccinations in a last minute effort to beat Monday's deadline imposed by the county board of health.

No children were to be allowed into school on Monday without proof of having been vaccinated against 10-day rubella measles, which health officials say has reached epidemic proportions in the county.

The epidemic has killed two persons and caused at least five cases of measles-related encephalitis, officials said.

More than 2,300 cases of measles have been reported in the county since last fall and the number is increasing weekly, reaching proportions higher than any time since the long-term measles vaccine was introduced in 1966, officials said.

Asked why there were so many unvaccinated children even though state law requires vaccination, Dr. Shirley Fanning of the county health department said, "I guess you'd have to say the law's never really been enforced."

Soviet Union's production up

Moscow (AP) — Moscow reported Saturday there was an over-all increase in the Soviet Union's industrial production during the first quarter of 1977.

More Americans changing doctors

Arthur J. Snider
Chicago Daily News

In an earlier day, changing doctors was as seriously weighed as changing religions. But today, a survey of patient attitudes conducted by the publication Medical Economics shows 52 stopped going to the same doctor at one time or another.

Doctor switching is not attributable only to dissatisfaction with the doctor or the office help. Another important reason is the mobility of Americans. People are moving to new neighborhoods or out of town with greater frequency.

Nevertheless, a 52 per cent dropout rate was termed disturbing by Medical Economics, a doctors' business magazine. In a 1963 survey, only 38 per cent of patients had switched.

Many of the switchers were in the no-nonsense now.

generation — people in their 20s and 30s who tend to be less timid than their elders about questioning the judgment of physicians. They also play a highly vocal role in urging their parents to change to new doctors.

A greater consumer interest in medicine and the trend toward more questioning of the doctor's diagnosis and treatment was another factor found in the survey. If the doctor becomes angry or assumes the patient won't understand, the patient frequently switches.

The trend among doctors toward asking immediate payment also has caused switches. As one patient said, "I sat too long in his waiting room looking at his 'Please Pay Now' sign and then I had to put up with his superior attitude."

There were the usual complaints about assembly-line medicine and impersonal doctors. One middle-aged man said, "Being a doctor doesn't give that person the right to be rude. A doctor opens his door to do business and since he has invited me to come into his office, he should be happy I came."

Some patients said they switched because the doctor did not give them enough service and others complained of too much. He told me to come in every week just so he could weigh me, said one overweight woman. It got to a point where I could not afford $10 a week just to step on the scale.

A misdiagnosis can cause a shift. One patient who complained of feeling tired was told he had a mental problem. It turned out to be mononucleosis.

Florida's oil spill dissipates

Key Largo, Fla. (UPI) — An oil spill that had threatened a beautiful coral reef off the Florida Keys dissipated to a relatively harmless sheen Saturday, but the Coast Guard said it was still looking for the culprit that dumped the oil.

The 60-mile long oil spill was edging toward shore, but the oil covering was so thick that it appeared to be easily riding over the reef, one of the world's prime fishing and skin diving areas.

It's moved in between the reef and shore. We don't have any reports of coral damage or marine damage, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Dave Tait.

It looks like the major concentrations of oil have dissipated. We haven't found any evidence of oil on the beaches, said Tait.

Planes and helicopters kept watch on the spill from the air and the Coast Guard cutter

Diligent was standing by with six other vessels equipped with oil-sweeping gear in the event any significant amounts of oil began washing ashore.

A Coast Guard plane flying over the keys Friday spotted two separate spills — one 60 miles long and the other 25 miles — about seven miles offshore. Most of the smaller spill dissipated during the night and the Coast Guard classified both as one spill.

Even no-nonsense scientists are Mars romantics

(c) Newhouse News Service Washington — With the possible exception of the moon, no heavenly body has intrigued Earthlings as much as Mars, the red planet named by ancient sky gazers after the Roman god of war.

Cartoonists have peopled it with little green men sprouting antennae. More serious planet watchers have pointed to its canals as sure signs that of all the Earth's sister spheres, this one would most surely hold life.

So it might have seemed somehow callous of the scientists who monitored the Viking landings on Mars to crush our fantasies with the hard news that Mars, like the moon, was nothing more than a lifeless rock — however spectacular its geography.

Put aside those grudges. The Martians will continue to thrive in our imaginations and metaphors and a recent talk by a member of the Viking team at the National Academy of Sciences showed that scientists are really romantics at heart.

Geologist Thomas Andrew Mutch of Brown University and late of the Martian space probe wrapped up the findings from that mission and brought along a slide show that knocked 'em dead.

The pictures, in black and white and color, were taken by both Viking landers in areas the scientists had presumed would be rather dull plains, compared with some of what Mutch called "the exotic landscape of the planet."

It is a landscape that includes mountains and valleys that would dwarf the Himalayas and the Grand Canyon, it is scarred by crater impact shapes quite different from the pock marks of the moon — shapes that remind everyone who sees them for the first time, Mutch said, of the impression left when a pebble is dropped in mud.

The pebble-in-the-mud crater impact shape and the canals, which Mutch said do, in fact, resemble stream beds, are suggestive of the presence of frozen, underground water sources that may have spilled along the surface when a meteorite landed or even poured along desert-like plains of Mars at a much earlier time, when the atmosphere of the planet was much denser.

Such news fan the hopes of those who would like to dream of an underground civilization or a long-vanished race of little green men. But on the hard surface of Mars, the landers detected no activity in a variety of laboratory tests that would suggest the presence of life.

At the first Viking site, the slides Mutch presented included a view of what appeared to be drifting dunes of the palest sand in sharp contrast to the darker ridges of mountains and craters.

Nothing is quite as it seems.

Mutch explained that the apparently drifting dunes have not moved much in 4,000 years.

In the color slides — and Mutch warned that no one is sure the color is accurate — the red planet appears to be yellow.

The small details matter at Metcalf's.

We know that funeral needs vary from family to family. That's why we take a personal interest in caring for the special details that allow a family to deal with grief in their own way. We'll help arrange transportation and accommodations for family and friends from out of town. The funeral arrangements and special requests will receive our personal professional attention. Following the funeral service, we'll assist the family with tedious details involved in filing for benefits from Social Security, Veterans Administration and insurance companies.

These details may seem small, but we believe they're important. The death of someone close to you is a difficult personal experience. At Metcalf's we'll do all we can to make it easier.

Most Americans favor ability, not preferential choice, in jobs

By George Gallup
Princeton, N.J. — Americans by an overwhelming majority, believe ability, as determined by examination, and not preferential treatment to correct past discrimination, should be the main consideration in selecting applicants for jobs or students for college admission.

The issue of affirmative action — described by its critics as reverse discrimination — will come before the U.S. Supreme Court this fall.

Even nonwhites and women who have most to gain by affirmative action vote for making ability as determined by tests the main consideration in filling places in industry and in college.

Overall, the public votes 8-to-1 in favor of ability. Nonwhites vote more than 2-to-1 on the same side. Women vote almost exactly as men do — 8-to-1 for objective criteria.

Here is the question used to determine attitudes toward affirmative action in hiring and education:

Some people say that to make up for past discrimination, women and members of minority groups should be given preferential treatment in getting jobs and places in college. Others say that ability as determined by test scores should be the main consideration. Which point of view comes closest to how you feel on this matter?

Rarely is public opinion as united as it is on this question. Not a single population group supports affirmative action. Attitudes are fairly uniform from region to region and among all age groups. Some differences do exist by education.

Opponents of affirmative action programs maintain objective criteria alone should determine who is to be hired or admitted to college and professional schools, thereby insuring the highest standards.

Soviet beer touted as safe for children and elderly

Moscow (UPI) — The Soviet Union fighting the national predilection for strong spirits has developed a beer so low in alcohol that it is safe for children, the elderly and athletes in training, the newspaper Trud reported Saturday.

Trud said the beer, made from barley malt but with the traditional golden color and smell of hops, has an alcohol content of no more than 8/10%. The content of normal Soviet beer ranges from 4 to 10%. The secret is the addition of a special yeast, said Valeria Isaveva, a chief of the Moscow All Union Scientific Research Institute of Beer and Non-Alcoholic Drinks.

Soviet officials have been pushing beer and kvas, a drink made of slightly fermented bread, to replace vodka and brandy in a continuing campaign against drunkenness. The new beer is even weaker than kvas.

Woman is taking city to the cleaners

Atlanta (UPI) — The Atlanta housewife who bucked city hall last year to start her own garbage pickup service has doubled her customer list to include the nation's attorney general and two ambassadors. Frankie Van Cleave, 39, has been underselling the city on "backyard service" ever since she, and another affluent housewife got so fed up with the city's high garbage rates that they started their own business.

"We've tried to make this thing fun. But I've learned a lot about business," Mrs. Van Cleave said in the plush suburban office shared with her husband, Steven, an international security consultant she calls "my staunchest supporter."

The president of Back Yard Team Inc. has turned down several offers to buy her out. Instead, she has "expansion plans."

No service at all

There are nearby counties that have no garbage service at all. There are all sorts of possibilities such as franchising the system or acting as a consultant to city sanitation departments or private garbage companies," she said.

Mrs. Van Cleave plowed last year's profits into paying off loans for her $6,000 garbage truck and took out a $40,000 four-year lease for two more — called "Big Momma" and "The Cub."

Back Yard Team served 270 private homes last year and now has 600 customers, 30 to 40 of whom signed up during the city's recent garbage strike. Mrs. Van Cleave expects to "top out" at 1,000 customers next year.

Mrs. Van Cleave charges $100 a year to drive into a customer's driveway once a week and pick up the trash.

The city charges $150, in addition to $44 tax bills which help pay for curb service. It has some 4,000 customers — about half of whom don't pay because of exemptions for the handicapped and elderly.

Once a week

Most Atlantans settle for the curb service, under which portable containers are emptied once a week by the city without the high fee for driveway service.

Most of Mrs. Van Cleave's customers — "the cream of the cream," she says — live in the fashionable West Paces Ferry Road area of northwest Atlanta.

They include Attorney General Griffin Bell, Atlanta Newspapers board chairman Anne Cox Chambers, nominated by President Carter as ambassador to Belgium, and attorney Phillip Alston, named envoy to Australia.

Mrs. Van Cleave gets fan-mail along with bill payments. "I hope you make a million but I doubt it" (Mayor) Maynard (Fat Albert) Jackson shares my hopes," wrote an Atlanta woman.

Mrs. Van Cleave's battle with city officials began in late 1975 after Jackson raised "backyard service" fees, which she claimed discriminated against the affluent.

Mrs. Van Cleave and her partner, who is now inactive in the business, were told they would not be issued a garbage collection permit. They threatened a court suit and got a 90-day permit. Later they fought for a one-year permit.

Fell says earliest colonists landed here before Christ's time

By David Haskell
Cambridge, Mass. (UPI) — Europeans and North Africans populated parts of the American continent in unsuspected large numbers hundreds of years before Christ, according to Harvard University Prof. Barry Fell.

These early colonists earned on an extensive trade with the Old World from about 800 B.C. until they were cut off by the Roman conquests. Some of their descendants live here today, said Fell, a marine biologist and expert in ancient European languages.

Only recently, because of astonishing amounts of new evidence, has this lost chapter of American history been brought into focus, according to Fell and a growing number of supporters.

Fell developed his theories from ancient languages found carved into rocks in widespread areas of the United States. The writings match ancient scripts known to have been used by pre-Christian Mediterranean cultures — evidence Phoenicians, Celts, Iberians, Basques, Libyans, and Egyptians lived here in large colonies, Fell said.

Some opposition

There are, however, those who insist there was no significant European presence in the New World before Columbus' voyage of 1492. Chief among them is Prof. Stephen Williams, head of Harvard's Peabody Museum of American Archaeology and Ethnology.

Williams said Fell's claims are unfounded. The material upon which Fell bases his theories "just doesn't exist," Williams said.

Undaunted by this opposition, Fell spends most of his time analyzing mounting evidence brought to his attention since his book, "America, B.C.," was published in 1976 by Quadrangle, the New York

UPI TELEPHOTO

Europeans and North Africans populated parts of the American continent hundreds of years before Christ, according to Harvard Prof. Barry Fell, seen here at his nearby Arlington home where he maintains a basement museum of artifacts.

Fell, who frequently gives classes and conducts tours through his collection.

Fell succeeded where others had faltered because of his unique linguistic skills, evolved from his early schoolboy contact with Latin and Greek.

While studying fossils on Pacific islands (he's a native New Zealander), the marine biologist came across some strange rock inscriptions which he later determined to be Libyan. After learning the secret to these, and other markings, Fell, through years of study, became expert in a half-dozen ancient alphabets.

One of these was Ogam — a linear script cut in grooves in stone, a system used by the ancient Celts who populated much of Western Europe and the British Isles. Fell's familiarity with Ogam was a key to solving the mystery of the rock writings. Of all the attacks on his conclusions, no one has disputed his translations of the Ogam.

Inscriptions common

The stone inscriptions were more common than realized, and when Fell's theories began to spread, this evidence began to be brought to his attention in astonishing amounts.

"When American archaeologists first began to send me inscriptions for decipherment and translation, I was astonished to learn that such documents exist here," Fell said.

His previous work had been on ancient tablets and cave inscriptions in the Old World, records of sea peoples of some 3,000-4,000 years ago.

"What I now began to receive from unimpeachable sources in North America were essentially the same types of documents, engraved in stone, and either excavated from some archaeological site, recorded from cliff faces, or photographed on massive rocks."

"I had never seen such materials mentioned or illustrated in books on the archaeology of the Americas and indeed was oblivious of their existence," Fell wrote.

One controversial find, Fell said, is the Davenport Stone — found in Iowa in 1874 and since condemned as a fraud and hailed as authentic. Fell said the inscriptions, used as a calendar, are written in Egyptian hieroglyphs, Iberian Punic and Libyan.

Another, the Bourne Stone found on Cape Cod, Mass., records in Iberian script the annexation of the area by a mariner called Hanno. A king by the same name is known to have sailed from early Spain

"Thus the truth has slowly come to light," said Fell. "Ancient history is inscribed upon the bedrock and buried stone buildings of America, and the only hands that could have inscribed it were those of ancient people."

The pioneers were the Celts and the Iberians of Spain and Portugal, Fell said. The Celts spoke a Gaelic tongue written with Ogam letters, the Iberians spoke a tongue similar to classical Arabic, but written in Iberic script.

Dialects derived

There are several American Indian dialects "derived in part from the ancient tongues of Iberia and North Africa," Fell said. The descendants of the peoples who brought those languages here may also be found among the American Indians, he says.

Also, Fell said, Basque sailors left grave markers in Pennsylvania bearing their names. Further south, Libyan and Egyptian mariners entered the Mississippi from the Gulf of Mexico, penetrated to Iowa and the Dakotas and westward along the Arkansas and Cimarron Rivers.

They left stone-carved records of their presence. The discovery and preservation of much of this material was credited by Fell to American epigraphic (inscriptions) explorer Gloria Farley of Oklahoma.

She said the inscriptions, among other things, attest to the manner in which the early settlers buried their chiefs. For example, one translates into "Haga rests here." Others were used as boundary markers, she said, such as one in Oklahoma which reads "land belonging to Rata," apparently a Libyan colonist.

Even after Christ, foreigners were no stranger to American shores, according to some researchers. Venturous Chinese apparently knew America's Pacific coast, perhaps about the same time Irish monks were occupying sites along the Atlantic Coast, only a few centuries after Christ.

And the Vikings, seafarers to whom much of the inscribed writings had previously, but erroneously, been attributed, did leave both physical and written evidence of their own presence down the New England coast more than a thousand years after Christ, most experts agree.

After Columbus rediscovered the New World, Europeans returned to this continent, ignorant of the previous occupations by offspring of their own ancestors. They spread through the land and, occasionally, came across unexplainable stone structures and markings which looked like they could mean something, only no one knew what.

Thus, said Fell, this story of early America lay unread until now.

Opposition scoffs at Fell's colony theories

Cambridge, Mass. (UPI) — "The evidence just doesn't exist."

And with that, Harvard University's head archaeologist dismisses claims that Europeans, before Christ, colonized parts of the Americas.

Dr. Stephen Williams is head of Harvard's Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology. He leads traditional archaeologists in rejecting the theories and evidence offered by another Harvard professor, marine biologist Barry Fell, as proof of such early European immigrations.

European presence in the New World in the numbers Fell suggests is counter to accepted historical theory that Christopher Columbus came first.

If ancient European writings were found here, as Fell claims, then they were brought here after Columbus or they are frauds, his critics maintain.

Fell also concluded that many American Indian dialects were strongly influenced by contact with these early European travelers.

"Wild claims," scoffed his opposition.

A recent article in the Harvard Crimson contends Fell's theories have "racist implications," were the work of "pseudo-science," and were reworked theories of others already discredited by the Harvard-Yale archaeological community.

The article's author, Peter J. Frawley, said "If Fell is representative of writers who make wild claims about American Indians, he is also part of an even larger tradition of purveyors of pseudo-science."

Williams, Harvard's archaeological authority, said he believed "virtually none of the evidence Fell uses will stand scrutiny by competent archaeologists."

"I know how ridiculous his statements are about American Indian languages" being derived in part from ancient European tongues, Williams said. "And those are ridiculous." Williams said one of his colleagues sees Fell's comments as "a rather racist attitude."

"My god, I've spent the last 25 years of my life studying this subject. I know what the American Indian has done in this country. Fell takes the data and reads it any way he chooses, as long as it fits his hypothesis."

Though Fell has a collection of correspondence with Old World linguists, including Arabic scholars, who confirm his translations, Williams contended there is no support from any "competent foreign linguists."

There is no supportable evidence of Europeans crossing the Atlantic before the 13th century, Williams said.

The Harvard Crimson article contended Fell's thoughts are not accepted because Fell does not belong to what it calls the "legitimate scientific community." Frawley wrote that Harvard archaeologists and linguists have frequently

Messages meaty in age-old graffiti

By Gerard Loughran, UPI

Since a moving finger spelled out Belshazzar's doom at the Babylonian king's feast in 539 B.C. — and probably for centuries before that — writing on the wall has been a universal pastime.

Traditional patterns persist, but a UPI survey shows significant modern deviations:

—Sexual liberation has led to a marked increase in graffiti by women.

—Racism is a growing theme and anti-semitism continues.

—Western Europeans are bored with their own politics but interested in others.

Wall writings frequently reflect national characteristics — Japan, humorless but artistic; Italy, flamboyant; Scandinavia, earnest and concerned; Iberia, relentlessly political; United States, witty and cynical.

Within their broad categories (political, scatological, racist, philosophical, humorous), inscriptions follow defined patterns:

The iconoclastic: "Arnold Schwarzenegger is a sissy" (on a New York movie poster).

The put-down: "Don't get dressed, you're not going" (on a bus in Panama).

The dialogue: "Rupert Murdoch was here."

"And will be back with a stock option" (Overseas Press Club, New York).

The optimistic: "Love will make you forget time and time will make you forget love" (in a New York subway).

The Erudite: "Education kills by degrees" (Oxford, England).

The illiterate: "Stop Graphitie now" (in a British train).

The mordant: "Is there a life before death?" (on a cemetery wall in war-torn Northern Ireland).

The desperate: "I can't breathe" (on a London sidewalk).

New York claims probably the world's most startling examples of graffiti in the daubs that smother its subway trains. Perhaps the most costly was when a British motor worker burned his initials into a factory wall with an acetylene torch. His dismissal led to a strike of 5,000 men and cost the Ford company $18.7 million.

Even Byron carved his name on an ancient Greek temple, and Australians think so highly of the art that the washroom block of a leading college offers a cordial welcome to its patrons:

"On behalf of the Melbourne University Graffiti Writers Club, we would like to welcome you. We hope you have an enjoyable and educational experience."

Sociologists generally are agreed there is no decrease in graffiti overall — in Spain spray paint is in short supply — nor is there likely to be.

Near the Porta Portuensis in Rome, archeologists found an aged Latin inscription begging people not to scaphare (scribble) on the walls. In a New York men's washroom in 1977, somebody wrote on the door "Stop writing on the door."

Melbourne historian Ian

Turner categorized scribblers as:

— "Those with a desire to immortalize themselves by leaving a record of their presence."

— "Those frustrated for other means of communication."

— "Those needing to purge themselves of some frustrated outrage."

Which category women come into is not clear, but several nations reported an upsurge of graffiti in powder rooms.

England's Duke of Bedford, whose stately home, Woburn Abbey, draws thousands of visitors each year, said, "It is peculiar that as soon as women get into the loos (toilets), they all go berserk. Men are not half as bad."

New York seems to excel in graffiti and its wry comments, many directed against local and central government.

— "Don't vote, it only encourages them."

— "We ain't going to pay for their crisis."

— "Your tax dollars at work — federal toilet renewal project" (in a heavily inscribed Greenwich Village men's room).

Anything remotely civic-minded invites an acid retort. A subway card exhorting cleanliness asked, "Did you make New York dirty today?" and got the reply, "No, New York made me dirty."

When somebody suggested, "There is no good, there is no bad, there is only truth," a realist asked, "Have you looked out of the window lately?"

Myths of war on crime dispelled by new statistics

By Patrick Oster

(c) Chicago Sun-Times

Los Angeles — Myth No. 1: Many criminals "beat the rap" because judges let them off on "legal technicalities."

Myth No. 2: "Soft judges" are a big reason criminals aren't deterred from further crime.

Myth No. 3: Most criminals get off with lenient sentences or go free entirely because of the amount of "plea bargaining."

Myth No. 4: Though some crimes aren't solved, police do "get their man" most of the time.

Myth No. 5: Though many criminals do get off, most of those caught are convicted and many are sent to jail or prison.

Many people believe that such statements about crime are "facts." And until last week, there was little one could do to refute such beliefs. The "facts" about the criminal justice system were just not available because police, prosecutors and judges have always run their affairs like a business that without books, records or accountants.

All that has changed. At a meeting of major prosecutors in Los Angeles last Thursday and Friday, unprecedented and previously unavailable crime data were released to The Sun-Times, providing the first meaningful look at the nation's war on crime. Coupled with crime data from several recent reports, the prosecutors' statistics outline a grim portrait of how law enforcement officials have responded to what many consider the largest problem — crime.

We know now, for example, that in major cities across the country, about half of all those arrested for "felonies" — serious crimes — have their cases dropped outright by the prosecutor and, to a far lesser extent, by the courts. Only in a minor number of cases are defendants acquitted on the merits.

Besides, only about half of those arrested for felonies are convicted. And less than 3 in 10 of those arrested will be sent to jail or prison, often after being convicted on a lesser charge.

Most of those convicted plead guilty rather than stand trial. The television stereotype of a prosecutor pursuing every criminal at a full-blown jury trial occurs in less than 1 in 10 cases.

From beginning to end, the fight against crime is a story of attrition. Many persons — as many as half — don't report crimes. Of those serious crimes that are reported, police manage to solve only 1 in 5, according to the latest figures from the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Of those arrests police do make for serious crimes, the prosecutors' data, compiled with the aid of a new computerized information system called PROMIS, shows this attrition:

• In Washington, D.C., 19% of all arrests for felonies are rejected for prosecution, later 35% more will be dismissed for a variety of reasons. Only 41 of every 100 persons arrested will be convicted of some crime, often a less serious one. And, on the average, only 23 of every 100 persons arrested will spend any time in jail or prison.

• In New Orleans, 57% of felony arrests will be rejected and eventually only 3% of those arrested will be convicted, with only 22 of every 100 arrested spending any time behind bars.

• In Cobb County, Ga., which includes the small city of Marietta, things are no different. Only 42% of those arrested for felonies are convicted.

In Chicago, Baltimore and Detroit, the attrition is comparable, according to a new book, "Felony Justice," by James Eisentein and Herbert Jacob, a professor at Northwestern University. Scientific samples of felony cases show that Chicago, exclusive of suburban arrests, convicts only 26 out of 100 arrested, sending only 15 in 100 to jail or prison. Detroit, because of extensive use of plea bargaining, convicts more than Chicago — 58% — but sends about the same proportion of persons to jail or prison — 20%. And Baltimore convicts 44 of every 100 arrested for felonies, sentencing only 28 out of those 100 to jail.

Cook County, which includes Chicago, appears to have a similar problem with serious crimes, according to preliminary figures from a soon-to-be-released Chicago Crime Commission study of 780 burglary and robbery cases. After about 200 cases were rejected for prosecution by the state's attorney's office, 41% of those cases accepted for prosecution were also dismissed by prosecutors and to a lesser extent by the courts.

In New York City, a 1977 study by the Vera Institute of Justice showed that 56 of every 100 persons arrested for a felony are convicted of some crime and 27 of those 100 serve some time.

On the West Coast, Los Angeles and San Diego fare no better. The Los Angeles district attorney and the city prosecutor convict only 45 out of 100 persons arrested for serious crime and send only 27 of the 100 to jail or prison, according to figures reported to the California Bureau of Criminal Statistics. In San Diego, prosecutors convict only 41 in 100 of those arrested for felonies and send only 21 of those 100 to jail or prison.

Even at the prison level, the figures on how criminals are treated are not encouraging. According to statistics developed by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, the average person in prison spends only 17 months behind bars before being released.

Research shows electroshock treatments often cause brain damage

By Richard Newcombe
Bethesda Md (UPI) — The elderly patient had survived the horrors of a Nazi concentration camp, but he was terrified of another electric shock treatment. He begged his young psychiatrist to turn off the juice.

But the doctor, Peter Breggin, said when the incident occurred in 1965 at a small upstate New York hospital he ignored the man's plea. During the next few weeks he administered another half dozen shocks.

He begged me not to do the electricity to him again, said Breggin, now director of the Center for the Study of Psychiatry in suburban Washington. The irony, and tragedy, was that this man had escaped from a concentration camp in Nazi Germany 25 years earlier.

I felt like he had gone from one camp to another.

Breggin, 40, said the incident still haunts him. It was partly behind his desire to learn more about electroshock, known medically as ECT — electroconvulsive therapy.

In 1973 he began systematic research of the treatment. He has completed an in-depth study of six electroshock patients and reviewed 300 scientific reports on the subject.

His conclusion: the treatments often cause permanent brain damage.

Many medical experts question this.

In fact the treatment is administered annually to an estimated 500,000 individuals worldwide, 100,000 in the United States. Highly esteemed doctors give the shocks. Some say the treatment is one of the safest possible for mental patients.

Electroshock treatment, first discovered in 1938 by Italian psychiatrist Ugo Cerletti, has been a source of controversy since its introduction. In 1972, the controversy reached into national politics.

Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., was forced to step down as the running mate of Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern after it was revealed he had been given shock treatment at a St. Louis Hospital.

Several states, including California and Massachusetts, have considered restricting the use of shocks. Malpractice suits related to the treatment are pending in several courts.

Cerletti and other pioneers of the treatment did not use anesthetics, causing patients to shake uncontrollably when the juice was poured on. Some suffered broken bones as a result.

Today patients are given drugs which relax their muscles and knock them unconscious before the shocks — the equivalent of a normal household current — are administered.

The shocks are sent through wires attached to the forehead of the patient, who is lying down during the treatment. The actual shock is not supposed to last more than two-tenths of a second, but Breggin said many last longer.

He also said the voltage, were it to cross a patient's heart or respiratory center, is sufficient to kill though he said relatively few deaths have been attributed to the treatment.

Dr. Irving Taylor administers the treatment regularly at the Taylor Manor Hospital in Ellicott City, Md. He says: "Electric therapy is one of the safest medical treatments known, and it is frequently life-saving."

The treatment, generally given to patients who are extremely depressed and often suicidal, helps a person relax, Taylor says. He adds that scientists do not know why. We use a number of things in medicine that are effective even though we don't know why they are effective," he said. One of them is aspirin — and another is electroshock therapy. Breggin said the shocks produce partial but permanent memory loss about the past and in some cases hamper a patient's ability to remember things.

Left, write, left, write, left, write

Chicago (UPI) — A minority group in America may find a measure of liberation with a new secret weapon — a pen for lefthanded people.

Developed by Sanford Corp., Bellwood Ill., the pen has a soft tip allowing for smoothness of writing. Its immediate drying feature keeps lefthanders from smudging their way through wet ink.

The company sees the pen as a major benefit for lefthanders who have to push pens instead of pulling them as righthanders do or for those lefthanders who write with a hook to keep out of the ink.

In its research, Sanford found the 18 million lefthanded Americans as well as their counterparts overseas bear countless indignities because of their preference for using their left hand.

A left handed compliment implies a sly insult. A child of the left hand broadcasts illegitimacy. A lefthanded batter hits from the wrong side of the plate in baseball.

To the Moslems it is an insult to touch someone with a left hand. The Japanese, according to Sanford, used to beat lefthanded children. Women found to be lefthanded could have their marriages annulled.

Psychologists have long noted that the percentage of lefthanders with emotional problems is higher than righties — possibly caused in part by the social difficulties of the southpaw. Lefthanders usually find arrayed against them such everyday things as tools, musical instruments, school desks, cameras, gearshifts, doors and sports equipment.

But psychologist Theodore Blau reports the proportion of lefthanders among those who are notably creative may be far greater than chance. He includes such noted lefthanders as Michaelangelo, Raphael, Leonardo da Vinci, Picasso, Hans Holbein, Benjamin Franklin, Charlie Chaplin and Paul McCartney.

Rep. Paul Simon, last minute addition to the Democrats' Jefferson-Jackson Dinner, proposed a public service jobs program to cure unemployment.

Nebraska Demos hear Illinois Rep. Paul Simon

Exon hints of international grain sale

By Don Pieper

Gov. J. J. Exon hinted Saturday night that another international grain sale which could mean an income boost for Nebraska farmers may be announced soon.

"I have information that a new purchase may be in the works," Exon said in a speech during Nebraska Democrats' major fund-raising event, the Jefferson-Jackson Dinner.

In an interview after the dinner, the governor said the deal could be a major development and that an official announcement "could be made soon, or maybe a little later."

He declined to discuss details, although he indicated he knows some. "I talk to lots of people," he said when asked how he found out about the sale possibility and whether President Jimmy Carter or Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland mentioned it in their increasingly frequent discussions with the Nebraska governor.

Those talks have been frequent as Exon lobbies for changes in the Carter-Bergland farm program. He didn't hesitate to express his criticism of that Democratic program to the audience of 1,200 Democratic donors gathered for dinner at Pershing Auditorium.

He outlined his concern about a credit crisis faced by family farmers in Nebraska and said the Carter administration must increase the loan rate on wheat to at least $2.50.

Referring to the 1972 wheat sale to Russia, Exon said it was the Great Grain Robbery because the profits went to big grain dealers.

The Democratic administration must be careful or it may perpetrate a Great Grain Robbery of 1977. It was at this point that he hinted a sale is coming.

"I just hope the credit institutions which are insisting that farmers sell grain holdings even at below-cost prices to repay loans) can hold on just a little longer because prices may be going up," he said.

The theme of the dinner was "Happy Days Are Here Again," and, except for Exon's declaration that he isn't happy with the Carter-Bergland farm program, the speakers were in a mood to celebrate.

A year ago, Exon and Lt. Gov. Gerald Whelan were the top elected Democrats. This year, they shared the spotlight with Sen. Edward Zorinsky and Rep. John Cavanaugh, a pair of Omahans who broke the Republican grip on Nebraska's congressional delegation.

Every speaker but the governor — and he didn't mention it, even indirectly — promoted an Exon for Senate campaign for 1978.

But it is the possibility of an Exon Senate victory — raising the Democrats to majority status in Nebraska's five-seat congressional delegation if Cavanaugh is reelected — that has the party singing "Happy Days Are Here Again."

Zorinsky's nontraditional commentaries on Senate procedures and Cavanaugh's splash of attention in the national press also drew praise from party officials.

"They have put Nebraska on the map in a way Tweedle-dee and Tweedle-dum couldn't do in 89 years," said National Committeeman Allen O'Donnell of Wayne, referring to Republicans Roman Hruska, whom Zorinsky succeeded, and Carl Curtis, whom Exon is being urged to try to succeed.

Cavanaugh said he has been urging Exon privately to run and wanted to go public with the plea.

Zorinsky, who serves on the Senate Agriculture Committee, said he hopes Exon will join him there to help fight an eastern attitude he said he saw expressed in a sign in the White House.

"Food for Hunger, Not profit," the sign said, and Zorinsky said consumer states must be made to understand there won't be food if farmers can't make a profit.

Rep. Paul Simon, the Illinois congressman signed on as featured speaker so late his name didn't make the printed program, said he attended Dana College at Blair years ago and never expected to see so many elected Democrats in Nebraska.

Simon said it was "your red-haired congressman (Cavanaugh) who twisted my arm" and got him to cancel out of a program at Harvard and spend this weekend in Nebraska instead.

That pulled the party out of a hole. The search for a speaker started with requests to Carter and Vice President Walter Mondale weeks ago, but it wasn't until Thursday that Simon was recruited.

He was a hit. He was interrupted by applause when he proposed that a public service jobs program along the lines of the Depression era WPA (Works Progress Administration) be initiated to cure unemployment.

"I know the public image is of people leaning on shovels," Simon said. But he said he prefers to pay people for working than for not working, and there are schools, parks, bridges and other public works that could be built by persons otherwise unemployed.

Carter filed UFO report 4 years ago

Oklahoma City (UPI) — President Carter reported four years ago that he saw an unidentified flying object in 1969 which changed colors and shapes and moved toward him, the director of a group which investigates UFO sightings said Saturday.

Hayden C. Hewes, who organized the international UFO bureau 20 years ago, said he learned in 1973 that Carter had reported the UFO while governor of Georgia, and he sent Carter a form asking for details.

"To my surprise he filled out the form and returned it to me and indicated he had observed the UFO in October, 1969, while he was with 10 members of the Leary, Ga., Lions Club," Hewes said.

After Carter became President, Hewes asked him for a meeting to show "dramatic evidence" obtained through a new computer study on UFOs, but the invitation was turned down April 13.

No federal, state or local authorities investigated the sighting, he said.

Widow of slain reporter is sued

Phoenix (UPI) — Millionaire liquor dealer Kemper Marley Sr. has filed a countersuit against the widow of slain reporter Don Bolles.

Marley's suit accuses Rosalie Bolles of "infliction of emotional distress . . . and other reckless and outrageous conduct" in naming him a defendant in a $12.5 million civil suit following Bolles' death.

Marley's counterclaim seeks $51 million in damages. It also denies allegations in Mrs. Bolles' suit that Marley was involved in the bombing death of the reporter last June.

Lots of crackers are available

Detroit (AP) — Civil defense officials are asking if "Polly wants a cracker?" Or anyone else, for that matter.

They are stuck with 240,000 boxes of crackers, left from the 1960s when the federal government stocked 600 Detroit-area nuclear fallout shelters with provisions.

Poll: Bailey, Robinson lead Council race

Stories by Richard Paxson

1977 Sunday Journal and Star
Sue Bailey appears headed for a second term on the City Council after Tuesday's general election, and Councilman John Robinson may improve on his third-place primary finish, based on the results of a Sunday Journal and Star poll.

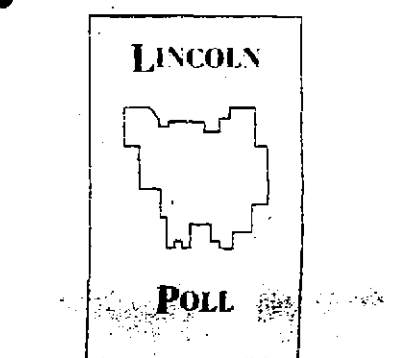

The real contest may be between hopefuls Joseph Hampton and Leo Scherer for the third open Council seat. Two other newcomers, Dorothy Walker and T. R. Allan, seem to be out of the running.

Mrs. Bailey was the most popular in the survey of the six-candidate race, receiving the nod from 21% of the 198 registered voters questioned. She also came in first in the primary with 6,803 votes.

Attorney Robinson was third with 6,490 votes in the April 5 preliminary behind the second-place finish of developer-investor Hampton, who got 6,535.

But in the results of the poll conducted early last week, Robinson pulled slightly ahead of Hampton, 16% to 14%. Except for that change, the candidates finished in the same order in the poll as in the primary.

Crowding Hampton from close behind is Havelock tavern owner Scherer with 12% of the vote. He garnered 5,757 votes in the primary.

Ms. Walker, a social worker, and T. R. Allan, a commercial real estate man, received 9% and 6%, respectively. That may put them too far back to be serious challengers. Ms. Walker had 4,098 primary votes and Allan 3,173.

Leader Mrs. Bailey got about equally strong backing from men and women and from people of all ages. She was more popular in south Lincoln than elsewhere.

That Mrs. Bailey got no votes from people with incomes over $25,000 is one surprise in the results. That group went strongly (32%) for Hampton.

Hampton's overall showing may confirm his claim of broad community support, but his popularity is far from uniform throughout the city. He got 20% of the vote in southeast Lincoln but just 8% in the northwest quarter of the city.

Robinson, the Council's only black member, received his largest margin (22%) in northwest Lincoln.

Scherer has put some emphasis in his campaign on his home turf, but the poll shows him doing only about as well in north Lincoln as south of O St.

If you were voting today for the office of City Council member, which of the following would you vote for?

	Sue Bailey	Joseph Hampton	John Robinson	Leo Scherer	Dorothy Walker	T. R. Allan	Unvoted
Total 198	21%	14%	16%	12%	9%	6%	22%
Male	20	15	17	13	7	8	20
Female	22	13	15	11	11	5	23
18-24	22	12	10	8	10	7	31
25-44	21	13	18	13	12	7	16
45-64	20	17	13	13	7	6	24

Southwest	25	12	18	12	9	10	14
Southeast	21	20	16	13	7	6	17

The error range of these results is plus or minus seven percentage points.

1977 Sunday Journal and Star

Voters may drop curtain on civic center—poll

1977 Sunday Journal and Star

The show may not go on for the proposed downtown civic center.

Despite a sophisticated public relations campaign mounted by its proponents and the absence of publicized opposition, the proposal to spend $7 million to renovate two Lincoln landmarks and build a performing arts center between them seems to have less than an even chance to pass.

Fully half the people questioned in the Sunday Journal and Star poll oppose the city's issuing bonds to remodel the old Federal Building and old City Hall and to construct a 2,500-seat theater on the block bounded by 9th, 10th, O and P Sts.

Among the 198 people surveyed, 43% said they would vote for the bond issue if the election were being held on the day they were questioned. Only 7% had not decided, a far lower number of undecideds than in the poll results on other general election ballot choices.

That could spell real trouble for the plan, since it is unlikely that all the un-decideds will resolve to vote for the civic center bonds, the proposal's only apparent possibility for success.

Substantially more men than women favored the center, which would provide more office space for city government. Part of the old Federal Building already is being used for that purpose.

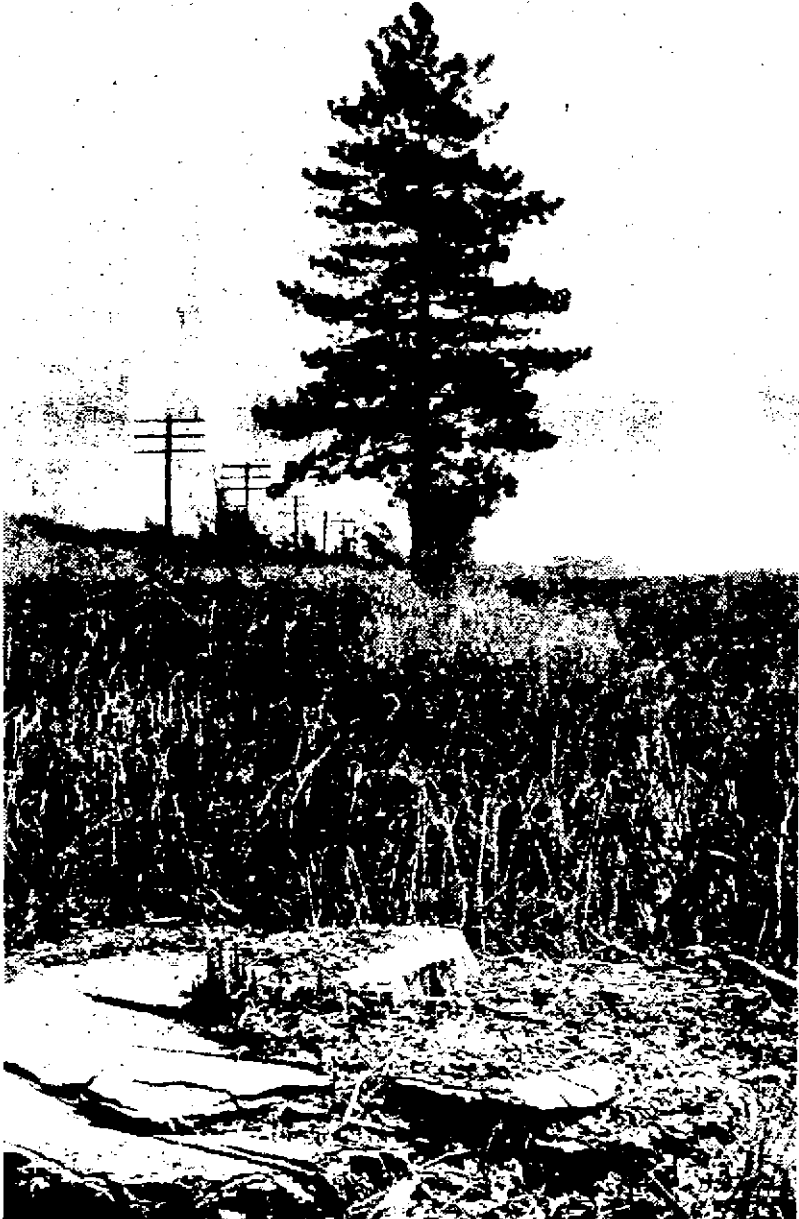

Strongest support for the construction came from people ages 18 to 24 and those with incomes between $15,000 and $25,000. More than three in four people with incomes below $7,000 are against the plan.

Southeast Lincoln was the sole quadrant of the city where a majority of the people questioned were for the idea. Half the Republicans — but just 37% of the Democrats — favored the bonds.

Based on statistical probabilities, the actual results may be as much as seven percentage points above or below the poll figures.

Cronkite acknowledges TV role, says people should read news, too

By Helen Haggie

"Television is highly influential, so, as a part of television, I am influential."

Walter Cronkite, CBS News anchorman, was answering a question about a survey which places him third in the chain of national power after the White House and television.

"All journalists carry a very heavy responsibility to report the news with the greatest accuracy and fairness possible," Cronkite said. "I don't want power. I don't have the will for it. I simply try to report the news accurately."

It is an editorial function to decide what is news, he said. There is no way, he said, for one person to exercise power at the CBS news studios. "The echelons of writers, editors and managers would rebel," he explained.

Cronkite said there is no censorship by management in good newspapers, radios or television networks.

There is the exercise of editorial judgment concerning what goes in a paper or on the air, he said, adding that this is done with logical and philosophical emphasis by persons who apply an ethic to their craft.

Cronkite skirted a question about whether the $1 million contract Barbara Walters has with ABC is too high. He in turn asked: What are you comparing it to? If to the salary of a teacher, yes it is too high. If to a rock star who makes that much in a concert, no. I think ABC is putting forth a good news program.

He thinks salaries for anchormen are absurd. The editor of the New York Times is not making the salary Cronkite is, and Cronkite believes the editor is a better journalist. "The whole salary structure is silly," he said.

"Television is the major form of news dissemination and I hope it does a good job in the coming years," Cronkite said. "I am not too happy that three-quarters of the people in this country get their news from television. People who can read should read."

"In a half-hour newscast, they are not going to get all the news. We can put only the words which would fit into three-quarters of a standard newspaper page into our broadcasts."

(Cronkite, in Lincoln to perform with the Lincoln Symphony Orchestra and Aaron Copland Saturday, said he foresees the journalism job market expanding for the next five years.

But in a news conference, he advised journalism students not to be discouraged. Ten or 15 years from now, he said, cable television will open more channels and the news-on-demand type of television, which is under experimentation in England, should provide jobs.

Television newscaster Walter Cronkite tells University of Nebraska-Lincoln journalism students the way it is on bigtime TV.

Ralph Sidney Cowley now has his high school diploma

By Jana Miller

Amid barely noticeable tears and unmistakable joy, Ralph Sidney Cowley took his place Saturday as a graduate of Bladen High School, Class of 1920.

"This is the crowning day of my life," Cowley, 76, told the dozen or so friends and family who had gathered in his honor. "This means more to me than you can imagine."

The surprise gathering had been arranged, in part, by Leonard Cowley of Dallas, Tex., who was sick and tired of hearing his kid brother fret about being a high school dropout.

The younger Cowley, you see, had never graduated. He had attended Balden High School and was one of 12 seniors back in 1920, but he never graduated. According to rules and regulations of the time, he had just plain missed too many days of school.

There were reasons for his absence, Cowley explained. First, he had been ill with the Spanish influenza. Then there was the blizzard. No mail for two weeks, five and three-quarters miles to school on horseback.

He said he couldn't go back to school the next year because of economics. He had to stay and help his dad on the farm.

Regardless of the reasons, Cowley was brokehearted and never forgot, even after 57 years.

"My little world fell down from around my shoulders," he recalled. "A high school diploma at that time meant more than a Ph.D. does now." Without it, he said, he felt inferior.

Cowley, who lives at 3201 No. 58th St., received his diploma Saturday. Bound in white simulated leather and stamped with "Class of 1920" in gold, the document was hand-delivered by Paul Heller, superintendent of the Bladen schools.

"You've been a matter of conversation for months around Bladen," the superintendent told the soon-to-be graduate. And then the superintendent presented the treasures.

Students had gathered together reproduced photographs which they hoped would bring back memories for Cowley. The Lettermen's Club had made him an honorary member and sent along a large orange chenille B. And the Bladen Board of Education, acknowledging Cowley's contributions, sent along its congratulations.

After that disappointing year of 1920, Cowley farmed until the early '30s. Then he moved to Hastings, where he worked for $14 a week in a machine shop. Later, he worked as toolmaker and engineering technical at the U.S. Naval Ammunition Depot in Hastings and as toolmaker and shop foreman at the Cornhusker Army Ordnance Plant in Grand Island. He also worked at the old Lincoln Air Base.

Now retired, Cowley does free-lance designing for the Garner Tool and Dye Co. of Lincoln.

With his diploma in hand, Cowley says now he'll "be qualified" to attend the Bladen alumni banquet, an occasion he has avoided even though he has been in town when the affair was being held. He thought he wouldn't have been welcome, he said.

It'll be different this year, though, because Cowley received a personal invitation from Supl. Heller himself. And Cowley says he'll make an effort to be on hand for the May 28 celebration.

By the way, the barely noticeable tears, Cowley says, really weren't tears at all. It was the humidity in the air. It just hadn't been properly regulated. And, of course, the brand-new, 76-year-old graduate would know. Of course he would.

Light turnout for primary may be repeated Tuesday City Election '77

The light voter turnout in the recent city primary election may be duplicated Tuesday.

Campaigns for City Council, Airport Authority and Board of Education have been low key and lacking in divisive issues or personality conflicts.

A new item on the ballot involves a bond issue for a proposed civic center using the old City Hall and the old Federal Building.

Today's Sunday Journal and Star includes the Voter's Guide, which gives the background and priorities of the candidate and the pros and cons of the bond issue.

Voters will be asked to approve or disapprove issuance of $7 million worth of general obligation bonds for the civic center project. If approved, it would house city government offices and be the site for a wide range of performing arts.

Seeking three spots on the City Council are incumbents Sue Bailey and John Robinson and four challengers: businessmen Joe Hampton, Leo Scherer and T. R. Alland and social worker Dorothy Walker.

Opponents for the six-year full term on the Airport Authority are incumbent Fred Eiche and businessman Robert Weigel. Competing for the two-year short term are incumbent Francis Minard and telephone company employe Robert Halvorsen.

The school board race features Stanley Linnertz, incumbent by appointment, versus Fannie Thomas, a social worker. They seek a two-year term.

Vying for the three four-year terms are incumbents Lou Roper and Pearl Goldenstein and challengers Milan Wall, Steve Slaikeu, Lynn Mortensen and Jerry Waechter.

The polls are open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Poll: Thomas leads Linnertz for 2-year school board seat

1977 Sunday Journal and Star

The general election race for three four-year terms on the Lincoln Board of Education could be a rerun of the primary, but an upset may be brewing in the contest for a single two-year term.

In the Sunday Journal and Star poll, the six candidates for full terms ended up in the same order they finished in the primary.

Incumbents Louis Roper and Pearl Goldenstein led the poll field with 17% and 13% respectively. Roper got 9,446 votes in the primary and Mrs. Goldenstein received 8,262.

Following them in the survey results were Milan Wall, 9% (7,727 primary votes), Steve Slaikeu, 7% (5,764), Lynn Mortensen, 7% (4,264), and Jerry Waechter, 6% (3,795).

The biggest surprise in the survey comes in the race for a two-year term created by the appointment to the Legislature of former board member Jo Ann Maxey. In that race, incumbent Stanley Linnertz, appointed to fill Mrs. Maxey's seat until the general election, is challenged by Fannie Thomas.

Linnertz finished ahead of Mrs. Thomas, 7,242 votes to 5,781, in the primary. But in the survey just completed, Mrs. Thomas leads Linnertz 37% to 30%.

Mrs. Thomas was the big favorite among a group in which Linnertz fared poorly — people age 65 and older. She also outpolled Linnertz in northwest Lincoln by more than two to one.

A large number of voters haven't made up their minds about whom they will cast ballots for. Four in 10 people questioned had not picked their three choices for full terms. One in three are undecided in the Linnertz-Thomas tilt.

The poll results may be off by seven percentage points either way, which is their statistical margin of error.

Because just six candidates filed for the three full terms and two filed for the single short term, all survived the primary to run general election campaigns.

Poll shows challengers gaining in Airport Authority campaign

1977 Sunday Journal and Star

Incumbents Fran Minard and Fred Eiche have lost ground to their challengers since the primary for Lincoln Airport Authority, according to the poll.

Minard, defending the seat to which he was appointed in 1975, came in just ahead of newcomer Robert Halvorsen in the April 5 contest. Minard garnered 6,397 votes, compared to 6,187 for Halvorsen, in the preliminary race for a two-year term.

But the survey results indicate that Halvorsen has now taken the lead over Minard among potential voters. Of the 198 persons questioned, 36% said they would vote for Halvorsen and 24% for Minard.

As Tuesday's general election approaches, Halvorsen's greatest strength was among males in the poll group and people with incomes above $15,000.

In the primary race for a six-year term, 16-year veteran Eiche had a comfortable margin over opponent Robert Weigel. Eiche got 7,312 votes, Weigel, 5,712.

Weigel's candidacy apparently has made considerable progress since that time, and he now is only one percentage point behind Eiche in the poll results. Eiche was favored by 34% of respondents, Weigel by 33%.

Weigel's strongest support came from people under 45. Eiche captured a plurality of the votes from older persons.

The large number of undecided voters in both contests will finally decide the winners. Four in 10 of poll respondents had not made a choice between Minard and Halvorsen. One in three had no favorite in the Eiche-Weigel race.

The percentages received by all candidates are subject to change because of possible statistical error, which is plus or minus seven percentage points.

Since only four candidates filed to run for Airport Authority, all four advanced from the primary to the general election.

Omaha woman shot to death

Omaha (UPI) — Pam J. Chapman, 23, Omaha, was shot to death with a 12-gauge shotgun Saturday in her north Omaha apartment. An Omaha man was being held in the Douglas County jail on suspicion of first-degree murder, police said.

Police said the woman was pronounced dead on arrival at Lutheran Hospital in Omaha following a telephone call to police for rescue assistance.

Police said the Douglas County attorney's office will review the case to determine whether charges will be filed Monday against the man.

Statehouse Letter

By Don Pieper

Salt Creek Fever

The ravages of Salt Creek Fever, a strain of the more widely-known Potomac Fever, sometimes are fearsome to behold.

The disease is sneaky. Until it reaches its final stages, its victims appear to be powerful and respected. But the virulence is at work. Suddenly, the powerful are reduced to dependency.

It isn't pretty. And there seems to be no cure.

Fortunately, it afflicts only those exposed regularly to the marble and limestone of the Statehouse. But it is epidemic there.

State senators, poor souls, are frequent (almost certain) victims. Only a few can shake off the disease and lead peaceful lives after legislative service.

Some of those whose service ends, as we see it, prematurely — that is to say, because they were defeated in a reelection bid — stay away. But they are apt to pout. The fever works on them.

The most common symptom of Salt Creek Fever, however, is the urge to stay connected, somehow, with the legislative process.

Many become lobbyists. Take all the former state senators out of the lobby corps and the halls would be nearly deserted.

Some run for other office. (Omahans, especially, are prone to this. John Cavanaugh is a congressman; P. J. Morgan went to the Douglas County Board; Warren Swigart is running for the Omaha City Council.)

And at least one fever victim, Jules Burbach, went to work for his former colleagues.

Prepared for job

Burbach, affected by the fever, concluded that 20 years as a state senator had prepared him for service as the Legislature's executive director.

He was feverish enough to say, as he was being considered for the job, he had more to offer the Legislature than the other way around.

It is true that Jules Burbach performed some valuable service as executive director. It isn't necessarily true that the Legislature needs an executive director or that Jules was the only reasonable choice.

But the fever had him. Anyone but a fever victim could have seen what was coming, would have understood the senators who objected last November to filling the executive director post with anyone, Jules Burbach included.

Sen. Burbach seldom got ambushed. But Executive Director Burbach, his self-preservation instincts dulled by the fever, got it, thud, when he wasn't looking.

He blames Dick Marvel — a senatorial colleague for two decades, chairman of the Executive Board and a member of the board majority which, in effect, sent Jules home to Hartington. Marvel, at least, should have warned him, Burbach says.

Probably he should have. Probably he should have insisted that the board discuss its move (elimination of the executive director funds from the budget) face-to-face with Burbach.

But it wasn't Dick Marvel or anyone else who was responsible.

It was Salt Creek Fever.

NU Madrigals, clarinet choir will perform

The Clarinet Choir and the Madrigal Singers of the University of Nebraska School of Music will present a free public concert at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Kimball Hall, 11th and R.

A feature of the clarinet program will be "Monochrome III," a work for nine B-flat clarinets, by Peter Schickele, noted composer popularly known for performing and explaining away the music of a fictitious P.D.Q. Bach.

The Clarinet Choir, directed by Prof. Wesley Reist, also will play "Three Pieces" by Pechel, "Galliard" by Arbeau and "Pavan" by Byrd.

The Madrigal Singers, directed by Prof. John Moran, will sing "Six Madrigals" by Thomas Morley and a group of old American songs adapted by Aaron Copland and transcribed for chorus by Irving Fine. The songs include "The Boatmen's Dance," a minstrel song; "Simple Gifts," a Shaker song; "Long Time Ago," a ballad; "At the River," a hymn, and "I Bought Me a Cat," a children's song.

Polling booths for prisoners

Jakarta, Indonesia (AP) — About 1,000 inmates in the three main prisons of this city of 5 million people will be voting on election day Monday, authorities said Saturday.

Polling booths have been specially set up for the inmates at their prisons.

'Tree Lady of Ashland' braces for more roadside cutting battles

By Michael Holmes
Omaha Nebraska Bureau

Ashland — Trees. That's why Marge Farmer, a white-haired woman of 48, did battle with the government. That's why others did, too.

They fought for trees. For 10,000 green growing things along Nebraska's roads. For leafy diversions from the monotony of long strips of pavement through the plains.

They did it for everyone, they said, and for the moment at least, they've won.

It was Mrs. Farmer and the others who organized Trees of Nebraska, Inc., and protested the State Roads Dept. plan to chop down some trees along the highways.

The trees had to go for highways safety, the officials explained. A wide, clear path was needed for errant autos.

But safety also meant sacrificing trees, and Mrs. Farmer couldn't tolerate that.

What else could be expected from the granddaughter of a nurseryman?

"My grandfather," Mrs. Farmer explained, "used to travel in a horse and buggy, selling trees. When he built this place he planted lots and lots of trees."

"This place" is the two-story frame house in which Marge and Bill Farmer live. It sits on top of a hill, a hill laced by streets with names like Cedar and Birch.

"The drought killed so many," Mrs. Farmer said, "that my Dad replanted with the fastest-growing trees he could find. He filled this hilltop, made it look just like a park."

It was from her home on the tree-covered hill that Mrs. Farmer traveled one day last February. On the way to Omaha she and her husband noticed state crews cutting down trees.

Marge Farmer

Later, some of their friends stopped and inquired about the cutting. "It turned out those crews didn't know why they were doing it," Mrs. Farmer said.

When Mrs. Farmer learned that the plan to clear a path 30 feet either side of roads would include cutting some 10,000 trees, she went to work.

"So many trees were coming down it just sickened me. At first, I thought it was just a local situation. No one realized this was a statewide project."

Protests followed quickly once Mrs. Farmer and other Ashland area residents learned what the impact would be. Events occurred so quickly, in fact, Mrs. Farmer admits she's still a little bewildered.

But the protests worked. Gov. Exon ordered a moratorium on the tree cutting. Trees of Nebraska, Inc., has been included in the drafting of a new road-tree policy, Mrs. Farmer said, and a statewide network of tree lovers has been formed.

"As soon as the media began reporting the cutting, showing pictures of trees being cut down, I began getting letters from all over the state," Mrs. Farmer said.

To date, she's heard from more than 2,000 people — by letter, telephone and petition.

She also has devoted nearly all her time to saving the trees. And she is quick to credit "a lot of people who put themselves to a lot of trouble. And I have to thank Gov. Exon. He gave us what we absolutely needed. He stopped the cutting while the program was reviewed."

Mrs. Farmer acknowledged there were numerous skeptics two months ago. Skeptics who didn't believe it possible to stop the government.

"But I felt if it could be done, why not try? Somebody had to. I felt the people at the roads department were reasonable — and they have been."

Strolling among the trees around her home, Mrs. Farmer said that just because the fuss has died down now, there's no reason to think the battle is over.

"Originally, we wanted to prevent needless destruction of trees along the roadway. Well, we still do. We'll see that a watch is kept."

All the effort has earned Mrs. Farmer a nickname, one used both affectionately by supporters and in anger by opponents. She's been called "The Tree Lady."

She smiled when she heard that.

"I don't mind at all," she said. "I like being associated with trees."

North Dakota sues to block Yellowstone River diversion

Bismarck, N.D. (AP) — North Dakota has asked a state court to block Tenneco Inc. from diverting Yellowstone River water for use in the coal industry.

The suit, filed Friday by Atty. Gen. Allen Olson and the counsel for the North Dakota State Water Commission, says Tenneco plans to divert water from the river in violation of the 1951 Yellowstone River Compact.

Diversion of water from the river basin requires the unanimous consent of North Dakota, Montana and Wyoming under a section of the agreement, the suit said.

North Dakota's legislature has not given its consent to the Tenneco plans, and a Montana Department of Natural Resources lawyer said Saturday that neither of the other states has.

A Tenneco subsidiary, Intake Water Co., has filed suit in a federal court in Billings, Mont., challenging the compact on constitutional grounds.

Tenneco, a Houston, Tex., energy, food and manufacturing conglomerate, has proposed diverting Yellowstone water for lignite coal gasification and other uses near Wibaux, Mont., and Beach, N.D.

Also named in the suit are Intake Water and another subsidiary, Tenneco Coal Co.

NWU sweeps Doane

By Brian Hill
Staff Sports Writer

Nebraska Wesleyan center-fielder Byron Stallworth took another big stride in breaking out of late-season batting slump Saturday, blasting a two-run homer in each game of the Plainsmen's 11-8, 7-5 doubleheader sweep of Doane at Sherman Field.

The pair of come-from-behind victories kept Wesleyan's hopes for a fifth straight Nebraska Intercollegiate Athletic Conference title alive. NWU stands 9-3 in league play (14-9 overall) and needs a sweep of league-leading Dana Tuesday at Blair to gain first place.

Stallworth, a junior from Howell, N.J., was batting just .246 a week ago, but went four-for-seven at the plate with two home runs in a doubleheader sweep of Midland Wednesday and had three hits in five at bats, including two more round-trippers Saturday, to up his batting average to .298 and home run total to a team-leading seven.

Stallworth's homers came in nearly identical situations and the second provided the winning margin in the first extra inning of play in the second game.

NWU first baseman Bruce Reed preceded each of Stallworth's circuit clouts with one-hop doubles off the left-centerfield wall with one out.

Stallworth's first homer, with Wesleyan trailing 7-3 in the fifth inning of the first game, started a Plainsmen comeback. The blast cleared the 380-foot mark in straightaway centerfield and his second shot left the field in right-center.

Wesleyan needed the power-hitting display, which included a solo home run by Doug Volava in the sixth inning of the first game, and a pair of fine relief performances by Ted Hall and Dan Klaus helped the Plainsmen offset some poor fielding.

"We were a little lax on defense today," NWU coach Ron Bachman admitted. "I guess we took them a little lightly after beating them 12-2 and 22-12 the first time we played them. We did seem to hit the ball well when we had to."

Doane rode the hitting of second baseman Bo Gutzwiler, who had four hits in the twin bill and reached base six of the nine times he stepped to the plate in the twin bill, and the Tigers had a big fifth inning in each game.

Doane sent 10 batters to the plate in a four-run fifth inning that gave them a 7-3 lead in the first game and the Tigers batted around in a five-run fifth that tied the score at 5-5 in the second game.

Wesleyan recovered with five runs in the sixth inning of the opener. Key hits in the frame came from Scott Volava, Greg Heckman and Jerry Setz.

Doane, now 3-15 on the season, will play at Peru State Wednesday.

Drake Relays

Des Moines, Ia. — Clearing the notebook of some notes and quotes from a weekend at the Drake Relays while preparing to leave for two weeks of vacation time.

Best quote of the two days here from the wags in the press box, who have a wise remark for every happening.

Niall O'Shaughnessy, the Irish Olympian who runs for Arkansas, lost a shoe with just over a lap to go in the distance medley relay.

"Now, if he loses his pants," Texas sports information director Jones Ramsey observed, "he'll be foot-loose and fancy free."

Despite the mishap, O'Shaughnessy was clocked in 4:00.7 for his mile after running a 4:00.22 in a special mile race on Friday.

The event here has been maligned so often for its bad weather — the rain poured the last three years — meet sponsors felt obliged to devote a page in the program to point out that it didn't rain on 81 of the previous 122 days of competition.

The wettest day came in 1969 when it rained almost two inches on Saturday. But the weather was perfect this time.

Wilkins a character

Mac Wilkins, the world record holder in the discus (232-6), is an interesting contrast to the more modest Al Oerter, who was the center of attraction at the Kansas Relays a week earlier.

Wilkins is full of confidence — brash might be a better word.

Oerter, who won four Olympic Gold Medals from 1956 until 1968 before "retiring" for the past nine years, is trying to stage a comeback.

"I hope he's enjoying it," Wilkins says, "but you have to be realistic about what he's trying to do. The world record is 20 feet farther than his best ever and he's 40 years old. My goals are to compete as much as possible, not just in the Olympics."

Amazingly, Wilkins didn't start to concentrate on the discus until his junior year in college at the University of Oregon.

He went to college as a javelin thrower. "I threw out my elbow during my sophomore season and had to give up the javelin," he reveals. "The snap and pressure on the elbow is totally different with the discus so I switched my attention to that event."

As a junior in college, Wilkins was fourth in the platter event at the NCAA, won it as a senior while also placing third in the shot put. Later came the world record and the Olympic Gold Medal in Montreal.

Wilkins won the shot put here and threw the discus on an exhibition basis, sailing it out over 200 feet on each of six attempts. But, for the benefit of the crowd, he threw in the stadium infield, which kept him from "cutting loose" for safety reasons.

"Throwing both events is kind of tough. If I'm going to throw 70 feet in the shot or approach the world record in the discus, I'm going to have to stay with just one." The discus is his obvious choice.

Royalty on hand

A talk with Godwin Hansen Obasogie, the Missouri hurdler, reveals that he is an official Prince.

Turns out his grandfather is King of the Ogenbugua Tribe in the Benin City area of Nigeria. Regal lineage is that the No. 1 son of the King becomes the next King. So, his father's brother is now King.

But, the King has no male heirs. That means, should he die, Godwin's father would become King and that would place the Missouri athlete next in line.

Godwin's grandfather had quite a few wives — "Six or seven" — Obasogie says, plus several concubines. The number of wives a man has, Godwin says, is an indication of his wealth.

Obasogie says he's too busy with track to worry about wives. Besides, I don't expect to ever have more than one.

Tom Mann caps record Fonner meet

By Mark Gordon
Staff Sports Writer

Grand Island — It was only fitting that Tom Mann set a record here Saturday at Fonner Park.

After all, Fonner closed its 40-day meeting with its most successful season with attendance and mutual handle standards. But Tom Mann did it in one quick rush.

The only trouble I had was rating him at the start. He wanted to run more than I wanted him to," explained Tom Mann's rider, Rob Williams after the 4-year-old gelding captured the $15,925 Gus Fonner Handicap over a mile and 70 yards.

"I started letting him run around the first turn. I started letting him out and he started picking up horses," Williams added. "He was drawing off at the end. If he runs like that, he'll be tough at Omaha (Ak-Sar-Ben)."

Tom Mann came from last in the ten-horse field to win by

Onofrio Criticizes 'Coaches'

Head football coach Al Onofrio of Missouri agreed to write an assessment of the coaching job turned in by three sports columnists and a sportscaster at Missouri's spring game Saturday.

Joe McGuff, sports editor of the Kansas City Star, and Bob Burns, executive sports editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, coached the Black squad while Bob Broeg, sports editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Bill Wilkerson of KMOX radio in St. Louis, coached the winning Gold team.

By Al Onofrio
For The Associated Press

Columbia, Mo. (AP) — I was very disappointed in the impatience of both coaching staffs in the first half of our Black and Gold game Saturday.

About 90 per cent of the first down plays in the first half were passes and that just is not good. You've got to keep the defense off balance and neither team did that. They did not establish the running game.

Bob Broeg and Bill Wilkerson, the Gold coaches, had three scoring opportunities but didn't score on any of them.

Once, they went with a low percentage play and took themselves right out of four-down territory. The next time the Gold tried an outside option play, but with the turf as wet as it was, the coaches should have known better.

One time they failed to capitalize on a fumble recovery and that was unfortunate.

As far as Joe McGuff and Bob Burns, the Black coaches, are concerned, they received a delay of game penalty on their very first drive and that cost them one opportunity to score right there. Later in the second half an injured player caused them another delay of game. They should have known an injured player can request to be taken out.

Either that or they should have gone ahead and called a time out. It was obvious it was going to be a delay of game call.

But I really couldn't believe it when the Gold team, with 30 seconds remaining and game already won, threw the ball. Broeg and Wilkerson have the game in the bag and take a chance on throwing it away. It would have been terrible to lose the game on a low percentage play like that.

All in all the first half left a lot to be desired as far as play selection. After the half, both teams did a better job of establishing the run.

But mostly, the unexpected became the expected and the expected became the unexpected.

However, it was enjoyable to sit in the press box and watch other people make a few mistakes. I think we all learned from this.

Now, if only these guys will remember what they went through when they watch us play Southern Cal next September.

with Marvin Koepp's Ever Amazing (who ran fourth), placed for $3.40 and $2.80 while Al and Eileen Casco's Upshur, ridden by Fred Ecoffey and coupled with Rudarco, showed for $3.40.

Williams was also one of the standouts at the meeting. He tied Ecoffey's record of 50 winners set in 1972 in a Fonner season with a four consecutive win surge from the fifth through the eighth races.

He won on Keith Riecken's Miss Brainerd ($6.60), Don Hoffman and Robert Hamilton's Speedy Rick ($14.00), Tom Mann and Carl Mercer's King Kamam ($6.20).

Williams won his first riding title outdistancing Tom Greer and Perry Compton. This is his first season as a journeyman rider after winning apprentice titles last season at Ak-Sar-Ben in Omaha and last fall's meet at Detroit.

O'D Kemling won his second Fonner trainers' title with 22 victories, 14 seconds and 12 thirds in 86 mounts for a record $82,847.

The final crowd of 6,474 boosted the meet's total attendance to 211,634 for a daily average of 5,107. That was a 3.5 per cent gain over last year's previous record figures of 204,286 total and 5,107 daily average.

The final day's mutual handle of $640,465 hiked the meet's total to $18,204,984 for a daily average of $455,124. That was a 10.2 per cent gain over 1976's mark of $16,505,984 for an average of $412,849.

Nebraska racing continues with the 60-day Ak-Sar-Ben meet in Omaha beginning Tuesday with a 4 p.m. post time.

Canadiens shut out NY

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Montreal's Steve Shutt, Guy Lafleur and Jim Roberts were handed easy goals in the first 8½ minutes, and the Canadiens walked to a 4-0 victory over the New York Islanders Saturday night for a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven National Hockey League semifinal series.

The Canadiens can wrap up the Stanley Cup series, and gain the final round for the 24th time, Tuesday night in Montreal where they haven't lost in 38 games since last Oct. 30.

Montreal goalie Ken Dryden was rarely tested and faced only 18 shots in recording his third shutout in eight playoff games this season.

It didn't take the high-flying Canadiens long to deflate a roaring crowd of 15,317 at the Nassau Coliseum and they were helped as much by the Islanders' generosity as by their own ability.

Washington Perspective

By Andy Montgomery

Customs, patent court pivotal

Washington — Most Nebraska farmers and ranchers probably have never heard of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, much less have any knowledge of what it does.

They'd better start boning up!

That five-judge appellate court soon will weigh the issue of protectionism v free trade, and its ruling will have wide ramifications for the agricultural community.

What's more, it eventually may be the arbiter in the current investigation into meat imports now being conducted by the U.S. International Trade Commission. The commission plans its only Midwest hearing in Rapid City June 14.

Ironically, that little-known and Republican Richard Nixon appointee-dominated court could possibly play a pivotal role in the 1980 presidential election.

The Carter administration has taken a strong position against domestic pressures to restrict foreign imports. That doesn't set well with the shoe, textile, television and beef industries, among others, all of whom are concerned with loss of jobs and income.

Free trader — and liberal Democrat — Sen. Patrick Moynihan of New York summed it up when he recently said, "There is a limit to what the workers . . . must endure in the name of a (free trade) principle few have heard of . . ."

Protectionist trend

With such concerns, it will be difficult to convince the country of the need for free trade. A president who fights this protectionist trend may find labor exerting its considerable muscle in the next presidential election.

Yet if the U.S. turns to protectionism to aid these industries, foreign nations are certain to retaliate against American goods. In the past, U.S. agricultural exports have been caught in the middle, to the detriment of the farmer.

The President can expect little help from Congress. Not only is there a stalemate there, but, if push came to shove, members' concern (real or imagined) for their constituents would translate into very real concern for their political hides.

The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals could be Carter's salvation by taking him off the political hot seat. Created in 1909 to decide certain questions arising under the customs laws, its responsibilities include reviewing decisions of the Customs Court and legal questions in the findings of the U.S. Tariff Commission "as to unfair practices in import trade."

International trade war

It now has before it a Treasury Dept. appeal from the unanimous decision of a three-judge U.S. Customs Court, a decision that not only has broad implications for world trade but the potential to set off an international trade war.

The three judges, one of whom is former South Dakota governor Nils Boe, ruled Japanese electronic imports, particularly television sets, are subject to U.S. countervailing duties to offset that government's tax rebates to its exporters. If left to stand, it could have a ripple effect on imports from other nations.

The decision favors Zenith Radio Corp. It was a setback for the Treasury Dept., which contended an adverse ruling would carry with it the likelihood of retaliation not only from Japan but from other nations.

Boe, in his opinion, set the tone when he dismissed administration warnings of disastrous political and economic consequences if the court held for Zenith. He said he was tired of the judiciary being urged to rule "in light of prophesized economic or political crises," and he insisted "the judiciary should not nor cannot serve as the alter ego of the executive or the Congress."

If the past is any clue, that could very well put him at odds with fellow Midwesterner Jack Miller of Sioux City, Iowa, the only member of the higher court with broad tax, farm law and legislative background. He also is one of three Nixon appointees on the appellate court.

Iowan could be key

Miller is being viewed as the key to any reversal of the lower court decision. He is a two-term U.S. senator from Iowa and, as a member of the Senate Finance and Agriculture Committees, had a hand in writing much tax and trade laws. He also was a coauthor of the 1964 Meat Import Law.

Based on his Senate record, Miller probably would agree with Boe that the judiciary cannot and should not be a congressional or executive "alter ego." He espouses the separation of powers doctrine.

But the past also suggests strong doubt that he would buy Boe's other arguments, especially that the courts can ignore warnings of potential economic and political crises from the Congress and the Executive Branch.

Miller also is unshakable in the belief that once Congress has spoken, the judiciary's responsibility is to carry out the law, regardless of ramifications. But if the statutes are unclear, if ambiguity exists, then he feels the judiciary must delve into the legislative history for clues to the past and for expressions of congressional intent.

It may be that old Congressional Records and committee reports may hold the key to how the U.S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals will rule on what is one of its most important cases since its founding in 1909.

Push being made for more children's services

By Marj Marlette

Sometimes kids get lost in the system. They go to court and the judge hasn't the means to solve their problems. They go from one foster home to another and no one knows for sure where they've been or for how long.

Sometimes, no one even knows who's legally responsible for them.

They're kids needing help — and the focus of a lot of attention at the State Department of Public Welfare in recent months.

Director Eldin Ehrlich, in office a year this month, is pushing plans to end the fragmentation of children's services in Nebraska and insure cooperative, long term planning.

"Every child," he says, "has a right to permanency." Ehrlich may be in the right job at the right time to accomplish those goals.

Momentum for improving services to children has been building for several years.

The disturbing findings of the legislatively directed study on children's services in 1974, and Sen. Wally Barnett's proposal to set up a new separate Department of Children and Youth in 1975 helped speed developments, said Ehrlich and Larry Nedrow, chief of welfare social services.

Barnett's LB373 was defeated in committee. Nedrow, one of those testifying against the idea of a new agency, said he felt the existing social services division of welfare could do the job if given a legislative mandate.

The Nebraska Committee for Children and Youth later approached Ehrlich, and he agreed to start planning — "though it would be a legislative decision."

This year, Gov. J. J. Exon appointed a Task Force on Child Care to resolve misunderstandings between agencies. And the Legislature's Judiciary Committee introduced a bill which would allow "status" offenders (those in court for family or school troubles, truancies, running away) to be sent to welfare not to the Department of Correctional Services (DCS). (Youth Development Centers are under DCS.)

The task force — made up of agency heads from institutions, retardation and corrections — has nearly completed its recommendations. The judiciary bill, LB453, will be considered during an interim study this summer.

Both the governor and Legislature have supported budget increases to improve children's services.

"It's the biggest thrust I've seen in 10 years," Nedrow said.

The situation up to now, Ehrlich explained, is that when faced with a child needing help, "judges have had to go shopping, try to fabricate services."

Judge Harry Haverly of Hastings, a frequent spokesman in juvenile areas, "openly admits to putting together whatever patchwork services he can," Ehrlich said.

If LB453 passes, the director hopes to provide a service system that will relieve the judges — who have long sought assistance — of that pressure.

In 1974, psychologist Brian Sarata of the University of Nebraska made a six-month study of juvenile services in the state and concluded that quality was poor. He had many illustrations.

Among the problems, he said, was that of "bringing it all together to make it happen." He found the need for a coordinating agency urgent.

That's where the welfare department is now headed.

Armed with a foster care study pointing to many of the problems that need solving, the department also has made plans to:

- Initiate a tracking system to make sure kids don't get lost.
- Establish different types of foster homes, including those for emergency care.

Larry Nedrow

- Expand training of foster parents and staff.
  - Provide staff to recruit more foster homes.
  - Increase maintenance pay for foster care.
  - Improve counseling services to the natural family.
- At the same time, staffing changes are being made at the Nebraska Center for Children and Youth for those children needing institutional care. (Some state charges also go to group homes.)
- Our aim, said Nedrow, is to make a permanent plan for each child coming into substitute care as quickly as possible — six months as a general rule.

"If we can't help the family so the child can go home, we look elsewhere," the social services chief explained. "We don't wait a year. Once a child goes into the system, he's out of sight. He may never come back to the judge's attention — or to ours."

Some kids, the foster care study showed, had been in care 10 or 12 years with no permanent plans made for them.

"Unfortunately, those who've been messed around from place to place often go on to other systems when they're 21," Ehrlich said.

Though some $800,000 is expected to be added to the child welfare budget, he and Nedrow emphasized that "new dollars are not the total answer."

"First, we have to maximize the present resources. Then as we find areas that don't have services, add them," said former legislative fiscal analyst Ehrlich.

Obviously, it will take time, he said, but "we're very excited about the cooperation we're getting."

Neglected child less likely to get help than delinquent

Don't have parents who neglect or abuse you if you're a juvenile needing services in Nebraska.

Be a delinquent. You and your family are more likely to get help if you cause the problems than if they do.

And you're more apt to go home again after a time in foster care (including institutionalization) than if you're the victim of neglect.

Those are some of the conclusions to be drawn from a study of foster children in Nebraska compiled by the Division of Research and Statistics of the State Department of Public Welfare.

Titled "Where Are the Children?", the research not only found how many children — more than 3,000 — are in foster care in the state, but tabulated information on who they are, how long they had been in a substitute home, and what they faced in the future.

Designed to identify the needs of foster children and develop resources to meet them, the study pinpointed many areas needing help to keep foster children from drifting in substitute care.

One of the biggest was lack of services to the natural family.

Though "parental behavior or condition" was cited as the only reason for placement of children in half the cases and as a partial reason in another 35%, only 19% of these parents received supportive social services from public or private agencies.

Placements resulting from the child's "behavior or condition," however, received services in 90% of the cases.

(Primary parent-related reason for foster placement was child neglect or abuse. Others: financial need, divorce, and drug or alcohol abuse. Child-related reasons included delinquency, running away, or drug abuse, and mental retardation or other handicaps.)

The lack of services led to another significant statistic: With no help to the family, fewer than 10% of the children were expected ever to return to their natural homes, even when custody was not terminated.

Also, adoption was planned for only about 15% of the children and there were a large number of children with indefinite future plans, the study pointed out.

Other problems identified: lack of information about foster children at local and state levels, lack of adequate coordination between agencies, lack of adequate planning and record keeping and confusion about the child's legal status.

A disproportionately large number of foster children come from minority families, the study found. Of the 2,657 children surveyed — an estimated 75% of all foster children in Nebraska — 28% were non-white, as compared to 3.4% of the state's total population that is non-white.

There were almost as many Native American children in foster care as black youngsters, though blacks outnumbered Indians in Nebraska six to one.

Black and racially mixed children, it was found, were most likely to have plans for adoption. Indian children were most apt to live with relatives and retain their ties with natural parents. White children had a slightly better chance of returning home.

Children of all ages are in foster care. But 72% are 10 years or older, and the biggest single age group is above 15 years.

The typical foster child is, in fact, a 16-year-old white male, the study reported.

Placed because of parental neglect, he had been adjudicated as dependent or neglected by the court — but his parents still retain residual rights. Both are living. His mother has seen him in the past three months, but his father has never visited him in foster care. They receive no supportive services. His brothers and/or sisters are also in foster care.

The boy has been in one or two different types of care, probably including a long-term foster family home.

Plans for his future: more of the same.

NPPD oks $3.6 million pact for 300-mile transmission line

Columbus (UPI) — The Nebraska Public Power District (NPPD) board has approved a $3.6 million agreement with Commonwealth Assn. Inc. of Jackson, Mich., for engineering, design and construction management services on 300 miles of a 345,000-volt transmission line in Nebraska.

Cecil Jones, NPPD assistant general manager, told the board Friday that the firm's services are required because the additional workloads would be beyond the capabilities of the NPPD staff in completing the job.

The board approved an $880,512 contract with CE-American Pole Structures Corp. of Houston, Tex., to purchase tubular steel structures for use on the 22-mile 230,000-volt transmission line to be built from Gerald Gentleman Station near Sutherland to North Platte.

All depositors paid in full

Dunning — The Nebraska Banking and Finance Dept. has announced that all depositors of Dunning Cooperative Credit Assn. have been paid in full. The department closed the association on Dec. 8, 1976, and determined that it was insolvent.

Department director William H. Riley said additional assets will be disposed of at public sale.

Charity checking

I would like to check on several funds such as Red Cross, March of Dimes and UNICEF to see how much money actually goes to those in need. I would prefer not to write directly to the funds. Is there some organization that checks on them?

—Mrs. Galen Behrens

ACTION LINE: The national Council of Better Business Bureaus, Inc., helps local BBBs collect and analyze financial reports of charitable organizations which solicit contributions. You may contact the Cornhusker Better Business Bureau, which has reports on file. Its reports, which list officers, organization background and services provided, also identify which outside accounting firm audits each organization. According to the BBB files, Red Cross provided 79.8% of its total income to program services. Administration took 7.6% and fundraising took 1.9% of the total $258,506,884 (for fiscal year ending June 1975). UNICEF funds totaled $11,182,524, of which 73.5% went for program services, 7.4% for administration and 18.1% for fund raising. For the March of Dimes, the breakdown of its $58,216,888 (fiscal year ending May 1976) is: 67%, program services; 6% administration; and 18%, fund raising.

Bright, but not necessarily right

Doesn't Lincoln have an ordinance against advertising displays that distract motorists? I am referring to the "Action Adeline" sign at 48th and Vine Sts. If there is nothing that the city can do, what can citizens do on their own?

—Edgar Pearlstein, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: You're right, city ordinance prohibits "brilliant sustained light" or flashing or blinking or rotating lights on signs near a street. However, Bob Wheeler in the city Inspections Dept. said that reader panels such as the one you're talking about are okay. "We checked it out real closely before we let it go up there," he said. He explained that it complies with the city sign code and zoning. But, for those who take a dim view of the sign, there is an avenue of appeal: Write the City Council and the mayor. The sign complies now, but that doesn't mean the code can't be changed.

A hoax on Cokes

Recently, I observed a sign on a Coca-Cola machine stating that if everyone saved pop tops it would give a kidney patient one day free care for every 900 tops. Is this on the level or is it a hoax?

—V.M.W., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Jim Austin in Houston's Coca-Cola national office said that the company has made no such offer. To put it blunt, it's a hoax. A check with the local Coke outlet also revealed that no such offer has been made. Austin said this same hoax has surfaced several times in the last few years.

VOLUNTEER

Hey, Give Yourself

Women, men and youth are needed by the non-profit Volunteer Bureau. Address responses to Rm. 219, Lincoln Center Bldg., 215 So. 15th, Lincoln, Neb. 68508. Or call 435-4980.

Do you care? Enough to share your skills as an LPN or RN a few hours a week in a program providing nutritional supplements to mothers and little children? Or in a program offering certain preventive health services to a group of elderly people?

Do you care? Enough to work as an assistant or as a member of the advisory board of a new program designed to educate citizens in a self-protection from crime? Especially needed are persons with public relations or simple bookkeeping skills.

Do you care? Enough to assist with a summer bowling league for handicapped persons? Volunteers are needed once a week from June 6 through Aug. 15 to help set up equipment and help handicapped bowlers.

Do you care? Enough to help organize a small library for a health agency located in downtown Lincoln? A volunteer with library experience and interests is needed one or two half-days per week.

Sixteen individuals registered at the Volunteer Bureau of the Lincoln Area last week, according to director Millic Katz. They were referred to such agencies as Clinton Area Child Care, Lincoln-Lancaster Commission on the Status of Women, Makine Community Center, Southeast Community College, Lincoln Literacy Council, Senior Art, Youth Services System, Child Guidance and Personal Crisis.

There'll be no sign 'til state office building is named

By Don Pieper

In case you're wondering, that block-square structure on the southeast edge of Lincoln's business district is the new state office building.

You may be excused for wondering. Even though state agencies have been conducting taxpayer business there since late last year, there isn't a sign anywhere outside to identify the place.

Stanley Matzke, as director of the Department of Administrative Services (DAS), is in charge of the facility. He says there surely ought to be a sign. There will be, he says, as soon as he knows what the building is to be called.

"We hope very much to get this resolved in the near future," Matzke says.

The delay, he says, is the Legislature's responsibility.

The heck it is, says Speaker Roland Luedtke of Lincoln.

The Legislature voted 42-0 during a special session Nov. 5, 1975, to adopt a resolution Luedtke introduced. The resolution recommends to the State Building Advisory Commission that the facility be called the George C. Gerdes Bldg., after the late state senator from Alliance.

Last year, Luedtke says, he followed up the resolution with a letter reminding the executive branch that the Legislature had expressed itself.

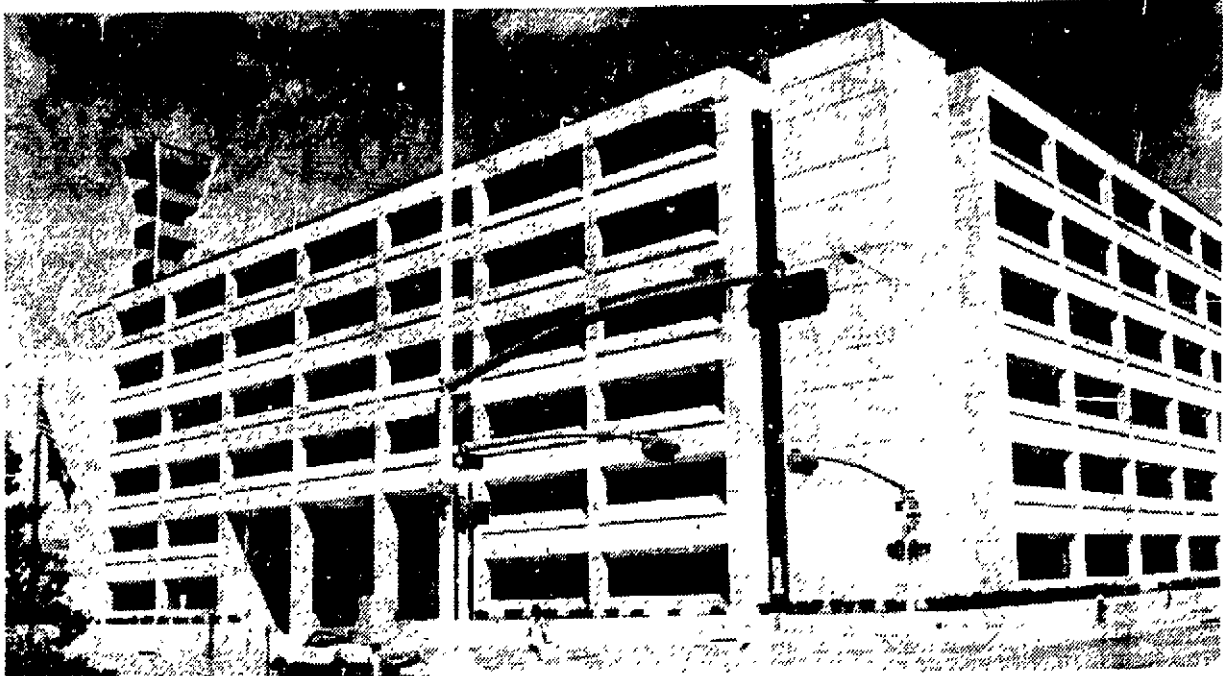

Matzke says the legislative action wasn't seen as conclusive. Right after the November 1975 vote, he says, senators went to him and said they aren't in favor of naming the building after Gerdes, but were embarrassed to try to amend Luedtke's resolution.

Matzke says the building commission sought other suggestions. He says that is why it waited until March of this year — nearly a year and a half after the Legislature's 1975 action and several months after agencies began moving into the building — to respond to the senators.

In a March 17 letter to Sen. Richard Marvel of Hastings, chairman of the Legislative Council Executive Board, Matzke asked the legislators to choose at least two names from among six suggestions the commission passed along.

The six names, according to Matzke's letter, "represent those names most often suggested during statewide solicitation which took place last year."

Matzke said Centennial Building was mentioned 138 times and George Gerdes Office Building had 72 "votes." The other names and the times Matzke says they were mentioned are Nebraska State Office Building, 22; Nebraska Executive Building, 20; The Bicentennial Building, 17, and George Norris Building, 12.

The new state office building goes without sign or name.

Matzke says he hasn't received any response to his March 17 letter and that is why he says it is the senators who are delaying the naming process.

Marvel says it is true he hasn't done anything about the letter. He and the executive board have just been too busy," he says.

Luedtke, who sponsored the legislation which authorized construction of the building and the 1975 resolution, says any further action by the senators shouldn't be necessary.

But, just to make sure Matzke and the building commission know where the lawmakers stand, Luedtke says he will introduce another resolution next week to have Gerdes honored.

Matzke says the statutes require the governor and the Legislature to approve the names of state structures and that nothing can be done, no matter how badly signs are needed, until the Legislature responds to the March 17 letter.

Luedtke says he will do all he can to avoid extended legislative debate on his new Gerdes resolution, recalling the hours spent earlier this session on an unsuccessful effort to name the new sports center after Bob Devaney.

In the meantime, Matzke is encouraging state employees to refer to the structure as the 301 Building, rather than by the initials of state office building. "We think it's a good building and those initials stand for something that's not desirable," he says.

The 301 Building title refers to the address, 301 So. Centennial Mall (15th St.).

80 bills might not be acted upon this session

For senators, lobbyists and Nebraskans interested in particular legislation, Monday signals the start of nail-biting time as the countdown begins on the final 17 days of the session.

Of the more than 120 bills languishing at the final debating stage, nearly 80 are given no chance of being acted upon this year.

Speaker Roland Luedtke of Lincoln even doubts whether all the 41 priority bills will get their day of judgment before sine die adjournment. The sense of urgency is partially mitigated because the bills can be carried over to the 60-day 1978 second session of the 85th Legislature.

The priority bills were chosen by individual committees and senators. They run from increasing the homestead exemption for the elderly and hiking the limits on installment loan interests to certifying clinical psychologists.

Of special significance to the capital city is Sen. Wally Barnett's bill for district elections to the Lincoln School Board. LB457 would force nomination of school board candidates in single-member district primary elections. All the residents of the school district would be allowed to vote in the general election for one of the two candidates from each of the single member areas.

41 priority bills

However, LB457 is 32nd on the list of 41 priority bills. Luedtke said he doubted if the Legislature will work its way that far down the list.

Any bill that isn't advanced off the first debating stage in the next 10 days cannot be processed through the legislative stages before adjournment, Luedtke said.

Before the legislators can even take up the priority bills, other weighty matters must be handled. Luedtke said budget measures will continue in the No. 1 position for legislative consideration. Then, bills at the second debating stage will be taken up.

Among those bills are such major issues as ending the personal property tax on farm and business inventories, livestock and farm machinery; mandatory property reappraisals by counties, state aid to schools, the criminal code and increased gas taxes.

Luedtke: time wasted

"We have wasted most of our time this session on select file (the second legislative hurdle)," Luedtke said. If that pattern continues, Luedtke warned, the entire week could be consumed without getting to the priority bills.

To break the coming log jam, Luedtke is considering instituting a rule to permit only 30 minutes of debate on each priority bill. At the end of that time, a vote would be taken.

Such a rule would mean complex matters such as multi-bank holding companies, LB385, and statewide ground water conservation, LB217, must be initially acted upon after only a half hour of legislative debate.

Luedtke is also planning on having the senators working longer hours. Once the final reading load becomes heavy, Luedtke said he will try to institute an 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. schedule. The Legislature now generally meets at 9 a.m. and adjourns at 4:30 p.m.

Here are the priority bills in the order they will be considered:

Committees

—LB142, Judiciary, limitations on filing suit in product liability cases.

—LB69CA, Constitutional Revisions, a constitutional amendment similar to the one on the 1976 ballot for tax increment financing.

—LB501, Public Health, revises the 1976 civil commitment law.

—LB407, Revenue (also Luedtke and George), increases the homestead exemption for the elderly.

—LB217, Public Works, allows for greater control of runoff throughout the state for ground water used for irrigation.

—LB44, Government, establishes an administrative rules and regulations review committee.

—LB509, Business and Labor, brings the state unemployment compensation law in line with federal law, including requiring employer contributions for large agricultural corporations.

—LB240, Miscellaneous Subjects, revises the 1976 political disclosure and accountability law.

—LB476, Urban Affairs, aid in the financing of housing.

—LB309, Appropriations, establishes a program of maintaining state buildings.

—LB52, Agriculture and Environment, increases financing for Gasohol program.

—LB385, Banking, permits the establishment of multi-bank holding companies.

Individuals

—LB114, Stoney, permits judges to sentence litterers to clean up details.

—LB186, Bereuter and Cullan, restricts the powers of State Office of Programming and Planning in local planning.

—LB340, Cope, restricts cities' power of eminent domain.

—LB204, Merz, establishes an alcoholic treatment program instead of jail.

—LB75, Reutzel, increases fines for game violations.

—LB394, Lamb, requires a vote of the people before a city can levy a local sales tax.

—LB402, Swigart, raises the driving age to 18 years-old unless the individual has completed a driver's training course.

—LB177, Dworak, requires regular paydays and sets remedies for nonpayment.

—LB380, Burrows, certification of clinical psychologists.

—LB372, Kelly, loosens restrictions on the number of children in a day care home.

—LB406, Moylan, licenses audiologists and speech pathologists.

—LB329, Maxey, establishes Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

—LB411, Maresch, discontinues watershed board members as members of natural resource district boards.

—LB223, Fowler, requires special facilities for handicapped voters.

—LB258, Schmitz, requires greater investment of state idle funds and retirement funds in state financial institutions.

—LB18, Nichol, increases maximum interest rates for small installment loans.

—LB212, Kremer, establishes new jail standards through a committee.

—LB436, Chambers, establishes a state legal research center for judges, prosecutors and public defenders.

—LB315, Rasmussen, transfers $500,000 to the Veterans Home Building Fund from the Department of Public Institutions Fund.

—LB457, Barnett, requires district elections for the Lincoln school board.

—LB327, Newell, alters the current equality test between the sales tax and individual income tax in setting rates.

—LB170, Koch, requires annual updates of property values with mandatory confirmation by the state tax commissioner.

—LB87, Clark, wipes off convictions for driving while intoxicated after three years without an offense.

—LB256, Marsh, requires the governor to submit a budget within the first 10 legislative days instead of the first 30.

—LB529, Brennan, requires workmen's compensation payments for plastic surgery.

—LB519, Kahle, eliminates state priority categories for use of federal revenue sharing.

—LB202, Simon, establishes regulations for franchise arrangements.

—LB223, Venditte, increases penalties for driving while intoxicated. (Still in committee).

—LB89, Goodrich, finances health, physical education and recreation building for the University of Nebraska at Omaha. (Still in committee).

Reds nip Whites; quarterbacks tie in spring game

By Dave Sittler
Staff Sports Writer

Fullback Keith Steward fell two inches and two points short Saturday of putting the crowning blow to a spring that could best be described as a toss up for Nebraska's football team.

The dominant theme from start to finish of the spring drills has been the No. 1 quarterback, or the lack of one.

Entering the spring game, Nebraska coach Tom Osborne had indicated the race among five players who were trying to replace Vince Ferragamo as the Cornhuskers' No. 1 signal caller was a toss up.

After 19 practices, all five appeared about even in talent and in a tie for the top spot.

After the 20th practice — the annual Red-White spring game at Memorial Stadium which was viewed by 13,038 fans — all five still appeared deadlocked based on their performances in the spring finale.

Had Steward, the White team's fullback, been able to bull his way up the middle of the Red defensive line a couple more inches, the game would have ended in a similar deadlock.

But Steward, who was trying to tie the game by converting a two-point extra point late in the fourth quarter, was stopped inches short of the goal by Red monster back Kent Smith and linebacker Jeff Carpenter.

The crucial tackle by Smith and Carpenter preserved a 23-21 victory for the Reds as Nebraska closed out its spring drills.

"I've had three guys tell me he (Steward) was over," said quarterback Tom Sorley, who had marched the White Team 72 yards to score in a frantic attempt for the tie.

The last drive was capped by Tim Wirth's second four-yard touchdown run with 1:35 left in the game. It was mounted against the Red's fourth team defense after Red kicker Billy Todd had given his team a 23-15 lead on a 36-yard field goal.

After Wirth's score, the Red coaching staff hustled the No. 1 defense back into the contest for the extra point. They came through denying Steward and his White teammates the score and the tie. "I really thought he was over," Sorley continued. "I like to win. I don't like losing."

White coach Jerry Moore, who could still manage a smile and joke in defeat since he lost to a group of his own players, said, "there was no question he was over. I think they (referees) homered us."

Osborne said, "from where I was standing it looked like he was over."

Osborne was standing in the press box. He decided to view the action with the press while his assistants handled the coaching duties on the sidelines.

What he saw pleased Osborne, who said "up in the press box it's hard to tell, but I thought the intensity of the game was good. The players were going after one another pretty well."

"I'm satisfied with the game and the spring. We're still not set at some positions, but we did clear up some other things."

While the quarterbacking position remained one of the unsettled spots, the return of the big-play—an aspect which has been missing in recent years at Nebraska—may have returned.

Split end Frank Lockett and wingback Earl Everett brought back memories of the big-play era of Johnny Rodgers, with a couple cross-country jaunts.

Everett, the senior who has bounced around from quarterback to defensive back and finally wingback, pulled the fans out their seats early when he returned a kickoff 96 yards for a touchdown with 5:55 left in the first period.

After J-back Rick Berns had posted the Reds to a 7-0 lead on a one-yard scoring run, Everett fielded kicker Billy Todd's boot on the four and bolted down the right sideline.

A senior from Kansas City, Everett's scoring romp was a spring game record performance. Kent McCloughan's 88-yarder in 1963 was the standard that had lasted 14 years.

"Earl had a good day," Osborne said. "And Curtis Craig (the No. 1 wingback) has had a good spring. We have a couple of good athletes at that position."

Lockett, a junior college transfer from Contra Costa Junior College in San Pablo, Calif., twice rallied the Reds from behind.

The 6-1, 190-pounder caught a 39-yard scoring pass from Ed Burns in the second quarter to push the Reds to a 14-9 halftime advantage.

After Wirth scored the first of his two touchdowns on a four-yard run, Lockett showed why he led the nation's junior colleges in punt returns last season.

He grabbed punter Tim Smith's boot on his 26-yard line and scooted down the left sideline for the score with 1:35 left in the third quarter.

Osborne tempered the excitement of Everett and Lockett's runbacks a bit when he said, "you have to realize we had some players who are a bit down the line (third and fourth team) in the game on those plays."

But the sizzling performance by the speedy Lockett pleased Osborne.

"Frank hasn't done that much this spring because he's had some problems with his ankles," Osborne said. "We knew when we recruited him that he could do a lot of things. He can play split end or wingback, can block and is a fine return man. He is still a little raw, but definitely has the talent to play somewhere."

Osborne knows he has some talent at quarterback, but he still does not know which of his five signal callers will be the starter when the Huskers open the season at home next Sept. 10 against Washington State.

"I thought each of the quarterbacks did a good job," Osborne said. "They did some bad things, too. But not as many bad things as in the past."

Like they have been doing all spring, each quarterback had a flash of brilliance. Four of them, Randy Garcia, Ed Burns, Tom Sorley and Tim Hager, led their teams to a score.

The fifth quarterback, freshman Jeff Quinn, continued to be impressive running the option. The Ord native rushed for 37 yards.

"Quinn is obviously a better runner than the others," Osborne said. "But as a passer, he is no better than fourth or fifth."

Quinn completed one of three passes for 13 yards, while Garcia and Hager topped the passing department with 84 yards each. Burns and Sorley were close behind with 63 and 62 yards respectively.

Osborne said the offense may have to shift its emphasis more to a running game next fall if Quinn wins the job.

"It's not a matter of re-designing the whole offense if we go with Quinn," Osborne said. "We would be running more off the option. But we are going to continue to throw the ball."

"It could still happen that Quinn will be redshirted, too. But if we change the offense, Quinn is definitely in the picture."

"A lot of players think everything is over after spring practice," Osborne continued. "But we still have 16 to 20 practices in the fall to look at players."

Calling it a successful spring, Osborne said, "the attitude of the players has been very good. We may be short on talent at some spots next year, but we will have to make up for that with hard work and a good attitude."

Lockett proves why he was hot recruit

By Randy York
Prep Sports Editor

Frank Lockett Saturday found Memorial Stadium's end zone a lot easier place to get to than Lincoln.

Lockett, a 6-1, 197-pound split end, scored twice in Nebraska's annual spring game: on a 39-yard pass from Ed Burns in the second quarter and on a 74-yard punt return late in the third quarter.

These were cakewalks though compared to the route Lockett took in transferring to NU from Contra Costa Junior College in San Pablo, Calif.

Before arriving in Lincoln, Lockett was such hot recruiting property that he holds the key to possible NCAA recruiting violations by Arizona State and he was almost hijacked by University of California coach Mike White at San Francisco International Airport last January.

Lockett was offered a scholarship by every school in the Pacific Eight Conference after he earned all-American recognition and led the nation's junior colleges in punt returns at Contra Costa.

He scratched Southern Cal and UCLA from consideration, saying those two schools prefer to play Los Angeles area athletes over Northern California athletes.

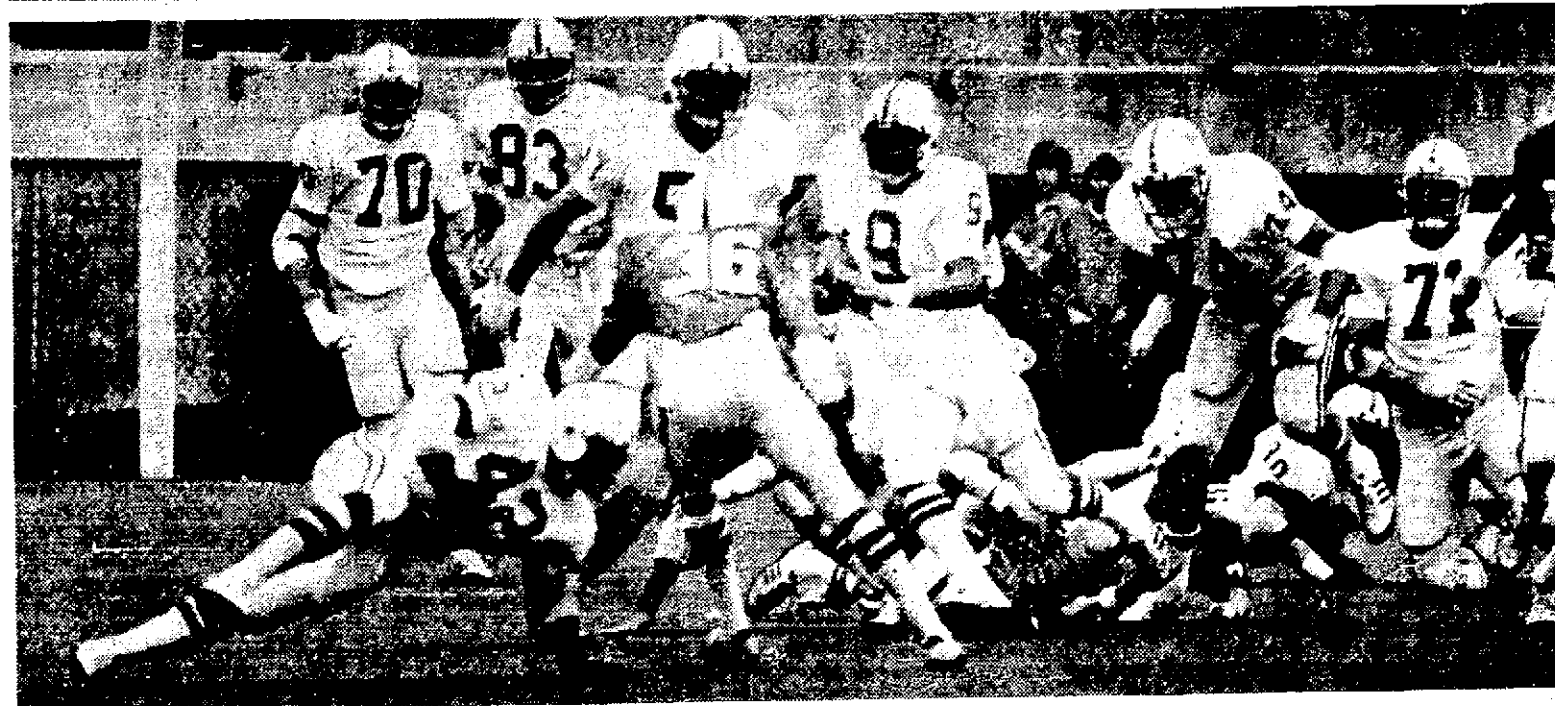

Arizona State and California refused to take no for an answer from Lockett.

"Arizona State kept bugging and bugging me," Lockett said Saturday, enjoying his new identity after toiling all spring in relative obscurity.

"Arizona State offered me a new car and a job that paid $200 a week if I'd sign with them," Lockett related. "I knew the whole thing was foul. The phone was bugged and taped. I'm still getting calls from the director of the Pac-8."

Lockett's experience with California recruiting didn't trigger an investigation, but it was equally exasperating.

OU, Arkansas top Drake Relays

By Virgil Parker
Sports Editor

Des Moines, Ia. — Oklahoma and Arkansas claimed the spring's only "Triple Crowns" while Nebraska saved its best showing of the day for the last event as the 68th annual Drake Relays concluded here Saturday.

For the 12th straight year, the final day featured a sellout crowd of 18,000. But something new was added. It didn't rain. While the final day of the Drake Relays has been inundated by a downpour each of the past three years, this weekend the crowd enjoyed the action under sunny skies.

The "Triple Crown" is a coveted mythical award for those who win the same event at the Texas, Kansas and Drake Relays — three of the nation's most prestigious track events which come on consecutive weekends.

Four relay teams and one individual came here with a chance for the honor.

Only Oklahoma's sprint medley relay team and the distance medley quartet from Arkansas were able to complete the sweep.

Arkansas miler Niall O'Shaughnessy had to overcome more than the competition while anchoring the Razorbacks to victory in the distance medley.

O'Shaughnessy, an Olympian for Ireland at Montreal, was eighth when he received the baton. He swiftly moved up to third on the stretch run with a lap to go. Then somebody stepped on his heel and his right shoe came off.

"It didn't hurt my running any," Niall said later. "I didn't let it psyche me out. I just concentrated on winning."

With one shoe off and one shoe on, O'Shaughnessy completed his mile in the excellent time of 4:00.7.

Oklahoma had the chance for two Triple Crowns, but the Sooners were denied the first in the 440-yard relay when Southern Illinois' Mike Kee overhauled OU's John Garrison in a race for the wire. SIU was clocked in :40.46, while the Sooners were timed in :40.62.

Oklahoma made good on its other chance, however. Randy Wilson, who beat Olympians Rick Wohlhuter and Mike Bolt in a special 800-meter race Friday, breezed through his two laps to anchor the sprint medley team to victory.

Nebraska's top effort came in the concluding mile relay event when the quartet of Tom Doval, Scott Poehling, Pat McKenzie and Ray Mahoney finished third behind Texas — with Olympian Johnny Lam Hones running the anchor — and Jackson State.

The Huskers were clocked in 3:08.83, which tied the second-fastest time in school history.

The other Nebraska showing of note was Keith Whitakers effort in the open 1,500-meter run. Whitaker fought his way out of several jams in the crowded field to finish fifth in 3:49.59. Iowa State's Jeff Myers made a great stretch run before the home folks to win in the record time of 3:47.31.

Other outstanding performances and notes of special interest to Nebraskans included:

— Eight other record performances Saturday in addition to Myers' mark in the 1,500. Those especially worthy of note were the 7-3 high jump by Missouri's Nat Page and the 8:31.02 clocking U.S. Olympian Henry Marsh of Brigham Young in the 3,000-meter steeplechase. That broke the existing record by more than 12 seconds.

— A big upset in the special 100-meter dash, featuring Jones of Texas and Auburn's Harvey Glance, who were on the U.S. Gold Medal 440-relay team at Montreal. Florida State sophomore Mike Roberson nipped them both.

— UNO, which was edged by Oklahoma Christian Friday in the sprint medley, reversed the role Saturday by winning the college division distance medley in 9:51.53.

— A state college individual who performed well was Kearney State's Jill Stenwall. She was second in the women's shot put after a 47-7 effort.

— Ex-Nebraskan Sam Francis was made one of the proudest folks in the sellout crowd by his induction into the Drake Relays Hall of Fame. Francis, in addition to earning all-american honors in football for the Cornhuskers, was an Olympic shot putter in 1936 and '37.

— Dave Jones, a grade school teacher from Owatonna, Minn., won the marathon in 2:23:49. It was the first time he'd ever run the distance competitively. Defending champ and ex-Husker Greg Carlberg didn't compete. Omahan Kim Keuter was 23rd.

— Just for the record, here's how other Nebraska entries fared — or failed. The Huskers distance medley relay entry was next-to-last by the time miler Harold Stelzer got the baton. He moved up, but never threatened the leaders.

— Four Huskers were entered in field events, but high jumpers Dean Herzog and Doug Phelps, pole vaulter Dean Ross and triple jumper Neville Murray failed to place. Nebraska Wesleyan triple jumper Jim Glen was the only other area entry and he suffered the same fate.

Coach Frank Sevine's Cornhuskers make their only home appearance of the outdoor season next Saturday afternoon when they host Missouri in a dual meet.

George Darlington were sitting in a United jet last January, waiting for it to leave San Francisco for Denver before going on to Lincoln.

"There was a call for me at the check-in desk and coach Darlington and I got off the plane, thinking it was my mother," Lockett related.

Instead, it was White, Cal's head coach, making a last-ditch effort to lure Lockett to the Berkeley campus, located only two miles from the family home in Richmond.

"He had seen in the paper where I'd signed with Nebraska. He got me in a corner of the check-in room, told me it was too cold in Nebraska and that I wouldn't get any publicity because I wasn't a hometown boy."

According to Lockett, White also told him to go ahead and enroll at Nebraska but not to attend any class for a week so that he could change his mind and return to Cal without NCAA-imposed penalties.

"Everybody really came on strong," Lockett said. "Nebraska leveled with me. I wanted to come here anyway because Nebraska goes to a bowl game every year."

Lockett gave West Coast schools reason to come on strong with their recruiting pitches. Last fall, he led the nation's junior colleges with six punt-return touchdowns and caught 37 passes for 784 yards and nine more touchdowns.

In the Bay Area Bowl against San Jose City College, Lockett caught five passes for 191 yards and two touchdowns. He not only offers :04.4 speed in the 40, but was a standout junior college wrestler with a physique that would qualify for a body-building magazine.

With all his credentials, why did it take Lockett so long to make his name in a Nebraska uniform this spring?

"Because he played better today than he has all spring," Nebraska receiver coach Jerry Moore replied. "He's had to be patient to learn our offense. It's pretty complicated. For three weeks, he was having trouble picking up an audible. You can't hold up a whole team because of one player. I knew one of these days it would just open up for him."

Lockett said there's another reason his spring progress has been slowed. "There was the ego problem, sure, about thinking I should be No. 1," he said. "But my ankles have been weak, too. I almost broke one playing basketball in winter conditioning and I sprained the other one early in the spring."

Consequently, Lockett's speed hasn't peaked all spring. He hopes a hard summer's work will correct that and help him become Nebraska's No. 1 split end next fall.

He also has a goal to lead the nation in punt returns. "I got a bigger kick out of the punt return than the touchdown pass today," he admitted. "But I'd just as soon be doing both next fall."

Olympia Gold scratch titlists

By Bob Moyer
Staff Sports Writer

Monte Steenson and his Olympia Gold mates have mixed feelings about winning the men's state bowling tournament scratch team title.

"We're very happy to win, of course," says Steenson. "But when we shot our score (3041, on the first day of the tournament) I was sure it would never hold up."

But their score did hold up as the men's state bowling tournament drew to a close Saturday at Parkway and Briarpark Lanes locally.

Along with Olympia Gold, other scratch champions included Bill Straub, Lincoln, all events and doubles; Bob Kopystynsky, Grand Island, singles and John Tavlin, Lincoln, doubles.

Joining Steenson on the scratch team titlists were his brother, Bruce, Roger Heffelfinger, John Esquivel and Brad Harman.

For Esquivel the scratch team win culminated an outstanding state tourney as he finished second to Straub in the all events and narrowly missed the scratch title in singles.

Handicap champions included Oly Rollers team, Gerald Wilson of Kearney, singles and Max Kaspar and Tony Davis, Wahoo, doubles.

Steenson felt bowling on the same pair of lanes against Max Jensen's Olympia Beer team "sparked his group to the win."

"We knew if we could beat Max's team we might have a good chance at winning it all," says Steenson. "Actually we trailed them throughout the whole match until at the very end when we got hot and passed them."

For the youthful Steenson and Heffelfinger, the scratch title was third for each in the past five seasons. The duo combined for scratch doubles wins in 1973 and 1975.

While the men's state tourney concluded action Saturday, the women's state bowling tournament will complete its course today.

Saturday there were no lead changes in the women's tourney.

Matured Everett philosophical

By Randy York
Staff Sports Writer

Not that Earl Everett was ever cocky, but you would expect a little more childish enthusiasm out of someone after he touched the ball six times Saturday and accounted for 195 yards in Nebraska's annual spring football game.

Instead, Everett, the former quarterback who has shown the patience of Job in 5½ fragmented years in a Cornhusker uniform, turned philosopher.

"Even if I wouldn't have had a good game today, I wouldn't be complaining," he said.

"Football at Nebraska has given me confidence in myself athletically, socially and academically. It's made me feel I can go out and compete in this world as a young man."

Everett certainly competed Saturday. He caught two passes for 42 yards and gained 21 more on a pair of runs. His most electrifying acts were two kickoff returns for 132 yards.

The first was a 96-yard sprint with 5:55 left in the first quarter after the Red team had assumed a 7-0 lead.

"That's my first kickoff return touchdown ever," Everett said. "I knew I had it when Dodie (Donnell) turned around and started looking me in the face. He had everything behind me. When I saw that, I knew it was smooth sailing."

Although Everett insists he's a tenth of a second faster this year in the 40, he wasn't about to slow up on the touchdown run to test his theory.

"You never know. Ever once in awhile, the bear (a fictitious athletic animal) will jump on an athlete's back and slow him down," Everett said, borrowing an expression from his old Kansas City high school coach, Bill Myles, who left Nebraska last winter for Ohio State.

Everett thought he was due for a good spring game. He may be the only NU athlete ever to experience six spring practice sessions since he was graduated from high school at mid-term. He practiced the springs before and after his freshman season, plus one each for his sophomore, redshirt, junior and senior seasons.

Keeping his weight around 191 pounds and avoiding nagging hamstring injuries this spring have helped Everett recapture his .045 speed in the 40.

"I've just had a few bruises this spring and that's all," he noted. "I haven't had to be so cautious."

Still, Everett isn't ready to assign the wingback position to himself.

"I've always dreamed of being first team," he said, "but I'm not expecting changes into fall camp. Curtis Craig had an outstanding spring, too. He's one of the best blocking wingbacks in the Big Eight."

Add another valuable quality — humility — to Everett's newfound confidence.

QB's eye hard work

By Dave Sittler
Staff Sports Writer

At the conclusion of Saturday's Red-White spring game, most of the Nebraska quarterbacks seemed to have one thing on their minds — hard work.

Four of the top five quarterbacks battling for the No. 1 job, indicated they are going to spend their summer months preparing for the challenge of replacing Vince Ferragamo as Nebraska's starting signal-caller next fall.

Jeff Quinn, proved to be as elusive off the field as on. Quinn, who is known for his slick running ability, had showered, dressed and departed the lockerroom before he had a chance to be interviewed.

Here are the comments of the other four quarterbacks concerning their quest to become the Nebraska starter:

Tom Sorley — "I'm going to work my tail off this summer to become the best football player mentally and physically that I can be. I'm going to be prepared for the challenge next fall. I'm sure the other guys will do the same thing. I think it's good for the team to have this competition. It is making me a better player to be pushed."

Eddie Burns — "I feel more confident now than at anytime since I've been here. Something has got to happen quick when we get back next fall. All of us know that and all of us will be working hard to prepare for it. Someone has to take charge next fall, and I'm going to work harder than I've ever worked this summer."

Tim Hager — "I'm going to have to work on my throwing and just spend time trying to do things more consistently."

Randy Garcia — "It's still open. It's just going to depend on who comes back the most prepared. I felt great out there today. In the past I've always been fourth or fifth going into the spring game with nothing to lose. Today I had a lot to lose so I had a lot of pressure on me, but I felt calm, in control. I knew what I was doing all the time. I was pushing the ball a bit when I was throwing."

Corky uncorks top high jump

Team scoring
 Southeast 144 Lincoln High 52
 Northeast 107 Holy Family 43
 Grand Island 62 North Platte 33 1/2

By Chuck Sinclair
 Prep Sports Writer

As Lincoln High's Harlan (Corky) Ford stood atop the medal stand to accept his Trans-Nebraska gold in the high jump at East's Stuart Stadium Saturday, Northeast's Duane Mundt and Hastings' Mike Myers politely slouched from their positions next to him.

It was a gentlemanly gesture on their part to put Ford alone in the spotlight.

Had they not ducked, Ford, who set a conference record with a leap of 6-6, would have still had to look up to Myers and Mundt.

The 12-inch difference in the tiers of the platform still wasn't enough to put the 5-3 1/2 Ford higher than his jumping counterparts.

But during the event, the lad who was nicknamed Corky because he was as small as a cork and could fit through a keyhole at birth, was a mountain of a man.

"I've seen a lot of things happen in my time," Lincoln High field events coach Bill Story said. "But I've never seen anyone so short jump so high."

Ford admits he has to take a little different approach than most jumpers because of his size.

"When I start jumping, the bar is already six inches over my head," Ford said. "I have to jump the exact same way every time or I'll miss."

If I just look down and think "this is a breeze because I've done it before, I'll miss it for sure," he added.

"I told myself before that (6-6) jump that I was going to put everything I had into it. I really wanted it."

Ford realized his limitations after he cleared 6-6 for the first time.

"I moved it up to 6-6 1/2 to try and get the school record," he said. "I was pretty tired then and didn't really think I could jump very much higher."

Now, when Corky tells me he's going to do something, I believe him," Story says. "He's that type of kid. He said he was going to make 6.6 today."

"I knew it when I got up this morning," Ford admitted. "I said I want 6-6. Why? Nobody in the city had jumped it and it would put me on the state track charts. That was important to me."

"Coach Story has really helped me psychologically in the jump," Ford said admittedly aware that he needs to psych himself more than others because of his size. "He tells me not to ever let down. To always keep working. He says when you think you've done the best you can, you can always do that much better."

Corky Ford is looking to 6-7 or 6-8 now. "I think I can do it," he said.

Bill Story won't disagree with him.

Lincoln East won the seven team meet with 144 points as several outstanding marks were posted.

Four other records were broken as Lincoln Northeast's Mike Sales got two with a :09.85 clocking in the 100 and a :22.3 in the 220 prelims. East's Todd Hinkle bettered the oldest mark on the books with a 14-8 pole vault, and the Spartans' Brian Dunnigan set the other in the two-mile, 9:30.1.

Corky Ford of Lincoln High strains to clear 6-6 in the high jump during the Trans-Nebraska track meet. Ford was successful at the height to set a new Trans-Nebraska record.

SE gals win city

Team scoring
 Southeast 16 East 8

They're No. 1

Lexington halfback Bill Dannehl, Plattsmouth safety Ric Lindquist and North Platte wingback Brian Ugai have more in common than being outstanding football players. All also rank No. 1 scholastically in their senior class.

The Nebraska chapter of the College Football Foundation has decided athletes excelling equally in the classroom deserve to be honored.

Friday night in Omaha, they will be. The Nebraska Sports Writers and Sportscasters Assn. has selected 11 academic all-stars who will receive special certificates at the Foundation's Hall of Fame banquet.

Former Southern Cal coach John McKay, now head coach for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, will deliver the principal address at the $15 a plate event at the Holiday Inn.

Take a minute, please, to inspect each honoree's academic standing:

Three Lincoln players honored

— Ugai, No. 1 in North Platte's class of 367; Dannehl, tied for first in Lex's class of 133; Lindquist, tied for first in Plattsmouth's class of 164.

— Jim Feehan, Columbus Scotus tackle, fourth in class of 77.

— Marc Felix, Seward quarterback-defensive back, 12th in class of 145.

— Don Gibbens, Lincoln Southeast linebacker, 32nd in class of 554.

— Dave Hogg, Omaha Bryan guard, 23rd in class of 367.

— Bob Koneck, Creighton Prep center, 17th in class of 200.

— Tom Svehla, Lincoln Northeast defensive back, 23rd in class of 501.

— Uduak Udofia, Lincoln High halfback, 21st in class of 446.

— Tom Walsh, Papillion fullback, 15th in class of 371.

Five of the 11 also earned first team all-state acclaim — Dannehl, Feehan, Felix, Gibbens and Lindquist. The other six were strongly considered.

Coaches reserve a special place for the athlete who wants his scholastic and citizenship rating to match his performance on the field.

North Platte coach Bob Starr says "I've been in coaching 19 years and if there's a kid I'd like to adopt, Brian Ugai would be it."

Plattsmouth athletic director Chuck Mizerski marvels at Lindquist when he competes in football, basketball and track. But he sees equally positive qualities elsewhere.

Lindquist leads the band, too

"Ric is our student council president," Mizerski notes. "He also plays first chair trumpet. He's just as enthused about helping kids in the band as he is about leading football players onto the field."

Lexington coach Dennis Thorell says "you can tell what his teammates think of Bill Dannehl when they elect him co-captain. You can tell what the student body thinks when it votes him homecoming king. Some don't like the image, but he's the all-American type kid."

Bryan athletic director Joe York says "I'd like to have a schoolhouse full of kids like Dave Hogg. He's mature, courteous and respectful beyond reproach. The U.S. Military Academy is getting a fine young man."

Prep coach Tom Jaworski points out that Koneck is one of the prime movers in the school's "Operation Others" program, which feeds 500 Omaha families each holiday season.

Seward athletic director Dick Gloeck says Felix is the school's best all-around athlete in at least eight years, "but above all else, he's a gentleman. There isn't a staff member here who doesn't respect him."

Gibbens was Lincoln's Defensive Player of the Year for the state championship Kings last fall. But his parents are probably prouder of his leadership in team prayer before and after each game.

After all, that is more important than the game itself.

Soviets rip Americans

VIENNA (AP) — The Soviet ice hockey team easily to an 8-2 victory over the makeshift United States squad Saturday night and took sole possession of the lead in the World Championships for the first time.

Czechoslovakia wiped out Sweden's perfect record by winning 3-1 in an earlier game.

That left the Russians with 12 points, Sweden with 10 and Czechoslovakia with nine, all from six games. These three teams will contest the playoffs with Canada.

The United States, with five National Hockey League players plus minor leaguers and college players, never stood a chance against the highly drilled Russians. Yet, the Americans had their moments of glory in Vienna's Stadthalle.

In the second period, trailing 8-0, the Americans suddenly flashed into life with two goals in 26 seconds.

First Wally Olds, who lives in Austria, shot into the net with the Russian defense spreadeagled. Then David Hynes, of Providence in the American Hockey League, scored from Bob Krieger's pass.

A small group of American fans, including Marines from the U.S. embassy in Vienna, waved flags and yelled their heads off while the excitement lasted.

The Russians never scored again on American goalie David Reece of Boston.

The Soviets could afford to take things easily, since Sweden had lost earlier in the evening. The Russians no longer depended on their goals record to top the standings.

In the third period, Hynes put another shot into the Soviet net after the best U.S. play of the evening. But this time it was offside.

Transfer Lockett sparks Red victory in spring game, 23-21

Nebraska's annual Red-White intrasquad spring football game ended in a narrow 23-21 victory for the Red squad Saturday, before 13,038 fans at Memorial Stadium.

The Reds, comprised of first and fourth team members, scored first with i-back Richard Berns, sweeping left end from one yard out to cap a 63-yard drive with 6:08 remaining in the first quarter. Billy Todd's conversion kick made the score 7-0.

But the White's Earl Everett quickly cut the deficit by scampering 96 yards with the ensuing kickoff, a spring game record. The PAT attempt failed leaving the score 7-6 in favor of the Reds.

Dean Sukup connecting on a 21-yard field goal to put the Whites up, 9-7.

The Reds regained the lead on a 39-yard TD bomb from quarterback Ed Burns to junior college transfer Frank Lockett with 14:00 remaining in the half. Tim Bergkamp's kick made the score 14-9.

White quarterback Tom Sorley engineered a 72-yard drive capped by Wurt's second TD, a four yard sweep around right end, to pull the Whites to within 23-21. But Keith Steward's conversion run for a tie was short with 1:35 remaining.

The Reds then ran out the clock to win the game.

The Way I'll remember

Dad died April 22 following a pain-filled week of battling with emphysema and a series of heart attacks. I won't remember him the way he died. I'll remember the way he lived.

Dad and I were close but no more so than he was with my three other brothers and two sisters. I just happened to bowl as well as he did for a few years and follow him around like a lonesome puppy.

We all liked the same things. He was in love with fishing. That's how we spent our annual summer vacations. We tried one family camping trip. It ended in calamity. We never tried again.

Dad wasn't one to brag on himself. It wasn't his style. He'd rather show you what he could do, then let you think about it. Like the time brother Bill and I had been playing golf all summer. We thought we were pretty good. We invited Dad out to play. He hadn't picked up a golf club in 20 years, but he beat us both by four strokes in nine holes.

Shooting exhibition

Dad didn't have time to hunt in the years I grew up under his watchful eye. But he did take me out to show me how to shoot the family 22 rifle so I could go squirrel hunting with friends.

I recall it well. He told me to find a stick and plant it on a hillside some 50 yards off. I found one, stuck it in the ground and walked to his side. I could barely see the stick.

He started shooting away with his old pump gun. The stick just kept getting shorter. He trimmed it, one shot at a time, until it was even with the ground. And he hadn't shot since he was a boy.

He taught us a lot about living and making the most of life. He helped us over the rough spots, then gave us a gentle push to find our own paths. He was always proud he never had a sour apple in his bunch.

He and his father broke us into fishing in their own special way. We went tagging along in our young years to Grandpa's favorite fishing hole. It was along Wolfe Creek near Beamon, Iowa, and it was stuffed full of fishy little chubs.

They'd giggle and laugh, hauling chubs in like there was no tomorrow. And we'd be laughing and hauling right along side them.

Special fishing

Fishing was special fun for our family. And family fishing was special for Dad. He'd invite one of us kids along just about every time he went, whether it was to Canada or along the nearby Iowa River.

I can recall one particularly fond night catfishing along the Iowa. I wasn't too awfully old and the night was dark and still. Dad and his friend had built a bonfire to keep us warm but the cool, cloudy night had sounds a little boy wasn't too sure of.

Dad would just laugh, try to explain what the sound was and kept on fishing. He did wrap an arm around me, however. The reassurance was enough to let me drift off to sleep. He'd always wake me if I got a bite. In our family you played your own fish.

I was honored last summer to have taken my Dad fishing. After all the times he'd taken me, I was privileged to return the favor. He'd had a heart attack two years ago and his labored breathing often prevented him from leaving the house.

He sat in our boat reliving old fishing times, maybe stretching the truth from time to time as memories permit you to do, but he was just as tickled as always about catching a fish.

Any fish would do. Any size. Any shape. Fishing was a joy of his life. So was feeding his backyard birds, raising his flowers and garden, tending his children. He never failed to have enough time or be in too big of a hurry.

That's how I'll remember Dad. I wish you could have met him. You'd have liked him, too.

Missourians tax self for wildlife

Kansas City (AP) — For only an eighth of a penny, the Missouri Conservation Department plans a return investment of inculcable value.

The Missouri plan has captured the attention of conservation officials and environmentalists around the nation. If adopted by enough states it could revolutionize the financing of conservation programs.

Quite simply, Missouri voters narrowly approved an amendment raising the state sales tax one-eighth of a cent and earmarking the funds for state conservation. Only after a five-year campaign were conservation groups able to get the proposal to the voters.

"This can accurately be termed a revolutionary thing," said Charlie Davison, the administrative assistant for the Conservation Federation of Missouri.

"Historically, conservation has been treated as something of an unwanted stepchild by most state governments... expected to get by on hunting and fishing licenses alone. Now, for the first time, we've got what we need, a broad base of financing for programs that will benefit everyone."

"We've heard from every state in the nation on this," Davidson added. "People want to know how we did it."

Nathaniel Reed, a former assistant secretary of the interior, has been one of the biggest boosters of the Missouri plan.

"As realists, we know that we have to decide what kind of environment we wish to leave behind for our children and grandchildren," he said. "For that reason, this can be seen as a chance to do something rare... in asking for a tax on yourself."

Officials estimate the tax will cost each Missourian an average of about $3 or $4 annually, and pour into state conservation coffers about $26 million the first year, to be added to the department's current budget of $18 million. The tax goes into effect July 1.

"With $44 million, we'll be able to do so much," said

Eager dogs with memory make best trialers

By Tom Vint
Outdoor Editor

Each year it seems like there's better than a good chance a national champion would have competed in the annual Nebraska Dog and Hunt Club AKC retriever trial.

The Lincoln club has two pretty good reasons for making such a boast. Omaha's Bing Grunewald and Grand Island's John Honore are regular trial competitors.

Grunewald has a track record unmatched in field trialing. The 75-year-old dog owner has qualified at least one dog for the national amateur competition every year except one since the event was established in 1952.

Grunewald also laid claim to the 1957 national derby dog championship, the 1958 national amateur championship and the national open titles of 1962 and 1967. He's not done yet as he is competing four dogs again this year in trialing with a shot at another national title.

Honore, the professional dog trainer who is now in charge of Grunewald's dogs, trained a national open champion in recent years and has had as many as 12 dogs qualify for the nationals.

Last year Honore qualified seven dogs and is running ahead of last year's pace already.

"I'm in better shape than I was last year," said Honore. "Some of my dogs just need points. I don't have any qualified yet but I've only run five trials so far. The first three I took about half the derby and open placings."

With nearly 15 trials yet to run, Honore looks in pretty good shape indeed.

So how do the likes of Grunewald and Honore do so

Bottom paint drying time

When boats rest at moorings for weeks or months, marine growths can collect on their bottoms and cut speed. To prevent this, there are on the market a variety of so-called anti-fouling paints. But strictly speaking they are coatings, not paints.

The difference is subtle but important. Basically, these products are not applied to boat bottoms to protect them from the water, or to make them smooth and attractive-looking. They are applied to repel growths. So properly speaking, they are coatings.

And because they are coatings rather than paints, they can and often do behave differently than paints.

For example, anyone knows well enough to allow paint to dry thoroughly before putting a boat into water. But the drying times of assorted bottom coatings vary widely.

In fact, research by boating experts shows that some are compounded to never dry completely hard. They are deliberately made to remain soft. This is so their surfaces will very slowly wash off with the boat's movement through the water so as to keep a fresh, toxicant-loaded surface that will effectively repel marine growths.

If such a coating is allowed to dry in the air too long, it can become so tough that it will not wash off slowly and will do a poor job of repelling growths from the very first day of launching. Or it may become so dry and brittle that it will crack and peel off.

All-woman safety class

The woman of the house won't have to worry about asking a silly question of the man of the house at this clinic. At least that's the way Lincolnite Pat Jerrison would call the all-female hunter safety clinic to begin May 12.

Jerrison, one of the state's most active hunters, said it'll be a great opportunity for the females to learn of hunting safety with other women.

The instruction will take place during six consecutive weeks at the National Guard's Pershing Armory on N. 33rd St. Class time will be 7 p.m.

well year in and year out? Knowing what to look for in their field trial Labradors sure helps.

Although Grunewald doesn't train his own dogs, he's the one doing the buying.

"As far as the dogs go, the first basic is a dog must have desire," said Grunewald. "And they must have an ability to mark a fallen bird. The rest a trainer can train. The desire and the ability to mark are born into a dog. You can't train that."

Honore agrees.

"The first thing is you have to have an eager dog," the pro

Bottom paint drying time

trainer said. "We go through a lot of force training with a dog. It's hard on them. You have to have a special dog to make it through that. I'd say one in 20 makes it."

"I usually get a dog when it's 10 or 11 months old. In four or five months you can tell whether the dog will be alright. It takes about that long to get through the force training."

"Then comes the ability to mark," said Honore. "That's important, too. And it takes a lot of luck from then on."

The ability to mark is the ability for a dog to remember where it saw a bird go down. In the case of a blind retrieve (one where the dog didn't see the bird down), the dog is taught to take a line directed by the handler.

Force training involves the line running, stopping for a whistle, taking hand signal directions from the handler and retrieving on command.

It's all part of the field trialing grind. Honore has been at it for 15 years and is now thinking of getting out.

"I've got 20 dogs here and another 18 at home," he said. "It's a lot of work. Fifteen years of this is a long time, a lot of travel. I've been thinking of setting up a dog training ground in Grand Island where people can bring their dogs and then learn themselves how to work with their dogs."

"It's being worked on now and the grounds should be ready by next fall," he said. "I'm not sure just yet how we'll run it or what we'll charge but there's a need for people to learn how to have fun with their dogs. It doesn't take too much training by a pro for a dog to get smarter than the owner if the owner doesn't know how to handle his dog. We'd like to teach people how to work their dogs better."

The Nebraska Dog and Hunt Club trial concludes today on the club grounds located one mile west and one-half mile south of the Phillips 66 station at the intersection of I-80 and Hwy. 77 north of Lincoln.

Two successful Nebraskans in the area of retriever trialing, Omaha's Bing Grunewald, left, and John Honore of Grand Island, talk about Grunewald's run at the Nebraska Dog and Hunt Club AKC trial Saturday.

Bowlers fail to solve league secretary's dilemma

State names honorary refs

Chuck Beachamp had a bit of a dilemma.

Two guys in his Miracle Mile League at Hollywood Bowl were tied for high game going into the final.

That problem seemed to be solving itself when Beachamp noticed on lanes 21-23 Don Dondlinger was shooting a 278 game.

But actually, the problem was only getting worse.

That's because at the same time Dondlinger was shooting 278, Craig Wulf was also shooting 278 on lanes 23-24.

The two scores didn't solve Beachamp's problem, but they were the high men's games for the week in local bowling activity. Actually, Wulf was 103 pins over his 165 average en route to his 278 game.

High men's series for the week was shot by Max Jensen, who had a 683 at Hollywood. Ron Genthe shot 680 at Plaza.

Ruby Dill has the only women's 600 series hitting 617 at Hollywood. Lettie Evans at Briarpark and Mary Ulmer at Hollywood had 599 series.

Ulmer shot 242 en route to her series but the high women's game was shot by Pat Kreifels, who had 254 at Parkway. Rosie Plantz had 245 at Plaza.

There were six triplicates during the week. Among those were Wes Lowell (177, Plaza); Sharon Jones (171, Bowl-Mor); Gary Minzel (169, Parkway); John Dietrick (157, Hollywood); and Larry Mackenstadt (152, Plaza) and Peggy Draper (125, Plaza).

Ray Stapert had his first 600 series a 606 at Plaza. Al Borchardt shot 253, 100 pins over his average at Parkway.

Four women had their first 500 series including Lori Machacek (518, Briarpark); Lbri Eurich (507, Parkway); Cindy Winn (505, Plaza) and Dee Simmons (503, Plaza). Barb Nelson had her first 200 game, a 205 at Parkway.

NEW YORK (UPI) — The stock market, stunned by the Carter administration's changed views on inflation and a apparent Federal Reserve Board credit tightening, escaped with little change last week.

Trading of New York Stock Exchange issues slowed from the previous week as investors tried to determine what lies ahead for the economy. A 1.4 per cent rise in the government's leading economic indicators showed the economy has gained strength lately.

Analysts said investors are confused by President Carter's actions after his first 100 days in office. He has backed down on his rebate program, proposed a complex and controversial energy program and announced a spongy anti-inflation plan.

Against this background, the Dow Jones industrial average, which plunged 12.47 points Monday to a 15-month low, rebounded the rest of the week to finish down only 0.17 point at 926.90.

The closely watched average lost 20.69 points the previous week. In the 100 days since Carter has been in office, the Dow has fallen 41.77 points.

The NYSE common stock index eased 0.03 to 53.66 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, containing some over-the-counter issues, finished unchanged at 98.44. Declines topped advances, 925 to 954, among the 2,092 issues crossing the composite tape.

Big Board volume totaled 97,758,800 shares, compared with 105,886,690 the previous week and 81,349,410 during the same week a year ago. Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all exchanges totaled 114,515,130 shares, compared with 123,834,810 the previous week.

Monday's jolting setback was sparked by revisions the Carter administration made late the Friday before in its inflation and gross national product growth projections: inflation was higher and the GNP was lower.

This latest change bothered many analysts, who had watched Carter drop his $50 rebate plans with little advance notice. While they approved of scrapping the rebate, many wondered if Carter hadn't set a precedent.

"He's said he won't impose wage-price controls, but he can change his mind about that," said Newton Zinder, vice president of E.F. Hutton.

The market also was hurt by indications the Fed had tightened credit because of a surge in the nation's money supply in the past month. The $300-million decline in last week's supply did little to offset the increase. Investors are worried the Fed squeeze will produce higher interest rates.

Meanwhile, government reports showed the economy was improving from the severe winter. The leading economic indicators' 1.4 per cent March rise was the best since a 2.3 per cent jump in July, 1975.

Business productivity jumped 3.2 per cent in first quarter. Business inventories and sales rose. A Wall Street Journal survey showed first quarter profits of 530 corporations climbed by a better-than-expected 7.7 per cent despite the severe winter weather. Retail sales were up 2 per cent last week.

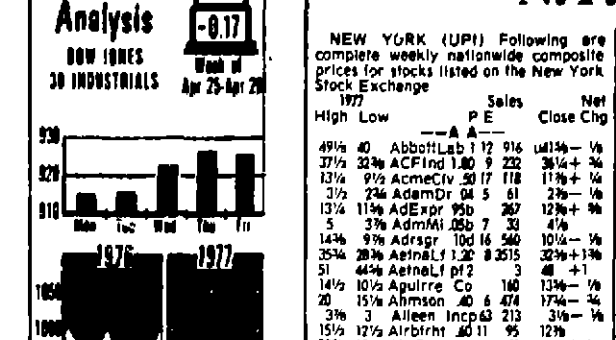

Farm prices, however, rose 1.5 per cent in March. The nation had a $6.91 billion first quarter merchandise trade balance of payments deficit, almost equal to that of all of 1976.

Steer, heifer gains told

Omaha (UPI) — Demand in cattle alleys at the Omaha livestock market was good through most of the past week with steers and heifers posting another large advance.

With three weeks of improving markets, prices were back to levels last recorded in May, 1976. Most packers were showing good early requirements as the inventory entering the week was very light.

The wholesale market responded accordingly and the stage was set. Some pressure was noted Thursday, but not enough to cause any great damage.

Receipts were up despite busy fieldwork in the area. The supply was unevenly distributed over the week. Receipts were 19,300, compared with 18,400 the previous week and 17,200 a year ago.

Steers and heifers closed 2.00-2.75 higher.

Steer top for the week was 44.00 with close up sales at 43.75 for six loads of choice and prime No. 3-4 at 1121-1238 lb. One load mostly No. 4 at 1440 lb sold at 41.00. Choice steers sold mostly from 42.50-43.50 with several loads of mostly Yield Grade 3 at 43.75-44.00. Mixed good and choice 41.50-42.50. Two loads of Holsteins with one load 1250 lb at 39.00 and one load at 1419 lb at 39.75.

Heifer top for the week was 42.85 with closeups at 42.75 for four loads of choice and prime. Choice heifers sold from 40.75-42.50. Mixed good and choice 39.00-40.50.

Average weight of steers last week at Omaha was 1142 lb, compared to 1160 lb the previous week. The average heifer weight was 968 lb, compared with 985 lb a week earlier.

Cows finished the week 1.00-1.50 higher. Utility and commercial cows sold from 26.50-39.00 with some early at 29.50-31.00. Canner and cutter 23.00-27.00.

Hogs at Omaha last week started out with a small advance followed by two sharply higher markets. Field work was taking priority over off market movement and terminals were seeing the affects by Tuesday, as buyers were competing to fill requirements.

By midweek, off market movement was rising sharply in volume and buyers were able to pressure hog prices by midsession Wednesday.

Feeder Cattle

Omaha (UPI) — Feeder cattle and calf trading in the principal marketing areas of the nation last week found an uneven kind of bidding. Buyers appeared less eager on most all kinds of replacements.

River market terminals: Choice and prime trim, framey 507 lb steers at Kansas City 49.00; 600-615 lb steers at Sioux City 46.00-46.20, around the circuit, choice 350-500 lb steer calves 44.00-49.00, with Sioux Falls to 50.00 and West Fargo to 50.50, choice 500-600 lb steers 42.00-45.50, with Sioux Falls to 47.50 and West Fargo to 48.10; 600-700 lb steers 42.00-44.50, 700-800 lb 40.00-44.00, with partly fattened 800-1095 lb steers 39.50-42.80; choice, some prime thin 300-500 lb heifer calves 35.00-41.00, with Sioux Falls to 42.00 and Sioux City to 42.65, choice 500-700 lb heifers 35.25-40.80, partly fattened 700-875 lb heifers 37.00-39.00.

Things are looking up for wineries in U.S.

New York — The U.S. wine market grew a "disappointing" 2.8% last year, but better times are ahead for the industry, according to Impact, a research newsletter for the industry.

Impact notes that the table wine category in 1976 jumped 8% to a record 231 million gallons.

Wheat lower

Chicago (UPI) — Wheat and soybeans were substantially lower and corn and soybeans irregularly lower last week on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Wheat was off 5 to 8 1/2¢; corn off 1 1/4 to 3¢, oats off 5 to 1 1/2¢, and soybeans off 4 to 7¢.

Soybeans traded closed at permissible limit declines in the three old-crop options for three straight sessions through Wednesday in what floor sources felt was an absence of fresh news that would encourage the rally to continue.

The limit-low closings imposed the variable limit rule on the old-crop options. The rule permits changes of up to 4¢ in either direction per session from the most recent day's closing price.

The old-crop prices continued another day on the skids before rallying Friday to limit highs in what market analysts said was a technical adjustment and a reinstatement of the bullish attitude based on dwindling world supplies.

Options game is fun, tricky and dangerous

New York (UPI) — The option — the right to buy or sell something at a specific price some time in the future — has been a way of business since biblical times.

Now options to buy or sell stock are the most tantalizing and least understood means of risking money for profit.

Long used by the sophisticated investor, options were introduced to the general public in 1973 with the start of listed trading.

As the name implies, options increase the investor's choice of action. The addition of put options this summer to the call options already traded on five U.S. exchanges gives him far more ways to win or lose.

A stock option gives the holder the right to buy (call) or sell (put) shares of a specific stock at a predetermined, or striking, price within a specific time. Most options are for 100 shares of stock and they have a life of up to nine months, at

Produce

Lincoln — The cost of an option, called the premium, is a fraction — usually no more than 10 to 15 — of what the 100 shares of underlying stock would cost.

Premiums vary with the price of the underlying stock and as the option nears its expiration, its value diminishes.

Options are tricky, which heightens their appeal for some sophisticated investors and increases the potential reward for options players who make the right move at the right time. The relatively small cost of the premium gives the options player high leverage for potential profits.

Rugged race set for AAA league

By Bob Moyer
Staff Sports Writer

The Lincoln AAA Fast Pitch Softball League begins regular season action Monday night at Ballard Field in what will be the most crucial league race in years for the loop.

That's because for the first time in several seasons the Major Division state championship, which includes the AAA teams, will not be held in Lincoln.

However, the major division regional tournament will be at Ballard Field and the league champion automatically gets a spot in the regional field as the host team.

That creates the possibility of two Lincoln teams in the regional, however, with the major division state meet in Scottsbluff, home of highly regarded D & A Manufacturing, it takes no genius to figure out why it is so important this year to win the league.

Stan's Lounge is the defending city titlist and with their strong 1-2 pitching punch of LaVane Johnson and John Jackson returning plus a healthy Roger Kallenberger in center field, Stans must be again considered the league favorite.

However, several other teams could offer strong challenges in what figures to be one of the tightest league races in several seasons. Dick Flynn Buick, Falstaff, Misty Lounge, Valentino's, Dean Brothers and Sweep Left all have solid ball clubs capable of annexing the league title.

The biggest change in the league rules this season will be the designated hitter rule.

Unlike Major League baseball, the AAA rule will allow a standin batter for any designated player in the lineup regardless of position.

This week's schedule

AT BALLARD FIELD

Monday	— Swanson Auto v. Valentino's 7:15 p.m., VIP v. Stan's Lounge 8:30 p.m.
Tuesday	— Misty Lounge v. Sweep Left 7:15 p.m., Dick Flynn Buick v. Falstaff 8:30 p.m.
Wednesday	— Dean Brothers v. Arnold's 7:15 p.m., Swanson Auto v. VIP 8:30 p.m.
Thursday	— Flynn's v. Dean's 7:15 p.m., Misty Lounge v. Stan's Lounge 8:30 p.m.
Friday	— Valentino's v. Sweep Left 7:15 p.m., Falstaff v. Arnold's 8:30 p.m.

AAA slow pitch mixes old, new

By Brian Hill
Staff Sports Writer

AAA slow pitch fans can count on something old and something new when the Al Hawthorne Slow Pitch League starts its season Monday night at Elk's Field, located at Sumner and Normal.

The opening night games will be moved back one-half hour for the festivities. Wentz Plumbing and Heating will meet Sam's at 7:30 p.m., Sam's takes on Barry's at 8:30 and Clock Tower Barber Shop plays Barry's at 9:30. Regular starting times will be 7, 8 and 9 p.m.

Sam's, the defending state champions, and Seward Merchants, the 1976 league champions, are favored to win the East and West Divisions, respectively.

Seward Merchants, the defending West Division champs, finished 27-5 last year and Sam's, which switches divisions this year, finished third in the west with a 20-12 mark. Colonel Sanders was the West runnerup with a 21-11 regular season mark.

Last year's East Division champs, Pershing Cafe, which lost to Seward Merchants in the league playoffs, will not compete this year. Replacing Pershing Cafe is Hy-Sports (Hyland Lumber/Sports), one of four new teams in the league. Clock Tower Barber Shop in the East and Ball Real Estate and Olympia Gold in the West are other new teams.

The East Division will be made up of Sam's, Commonwealth Electric, Barry's, Wentz Plumbing and Heating, Clock Tower Barber Shop and Hy-Sports. The West will include Seward Merchants, Colonel Sanders, Waverly-Stan's, Ace TV, Ball Real Estate and Olympia Gold.

In addition to the new teams, the league adopted a designated hitter rule for the 1977 season at a meeting Tuesday night, according to league statistician Don

City softball regulations set

The Lincoln Parks and Recreation Department has announced regulations governing the 1977 softball season.

The age limit for adult city league play will be 18 years of age or out of high school, whichever is youngest.

June 24 is the deadline for adding players. A team may make only seven player transactions past the original 17 members.

Individual trophies will be given to champion and runner-up teams in each class.

Copies of all changes to the managers handbook may be obtained from the softball office.

Lantz to speak at NU banquet

The Rebounders Club annual banquet, honoring the 1976-77 Husker basketball team will be Monday at the Elks Club.

Former Husker star Don Lantz will speak at the dinner. Lantz, who now plays for the Los Angeles Lakers, earned all Big Eight honors in 1967 and 1968 while playing for coach Joe Cipriano.

Reservations can still be made by contacting the Nebraska basketball office at the NU Sports Complex.

The house, among other designations, of "Henry on the Hill."

Old home of Henry on the Hill gone forever from Harvard

Harvard — For years it was the home of old Henry on the Hill. That name set him distinctively apart from Thresher Henry and all the other Yosts.

When the photographer stopped, he didn't know about the name and it didn't matter anyway. He just happened upon the old place, a couple of miles east of Harvard.

No photographer in this world could pass up such a wonder of incongruities.

The contrasts of elegance and decadence. Yesteryear splendor, today's rot. Scrolled 19th Century gingerbread, the musty remains of shingles. Splinterings everywhere of expensive glass.

And intricately arched windows, boarded up. The weathered boards then splashed with tin.

Yours is certainly not the first camera to have focused on the rare setting, you learn later. Even artists have set their easels on the spot. No matter, you still would have wired up the rusty pump for your own style of framing.

"It was the showplace of the country when Charlie Megrue put up that house," said Arthur Kitzinger, proud to have lived his full 77 years in this farm neighborhood.

The place was still a proud one under the Pembroke family and then three generations of Yosts. Ralph Yost, now of Harvard, spent his boyhood there and later batched in the house. It has stood vacant since he moved to town "some 12 to 15 years ago."

Kitzinger's grandfather passed down other early stories which somehow escaped local histories. The original single-story part of the house, for instance, was built as a depot when the Burlington came through.

"There was a pond nearby which they pumped from to water the engines," said Kitzinger. "Megrue kept the depot as the back part of the house when he bought it, then added on the fancy two stories. Kind of fit him. They say he even owned a race horse."

The photographer made a return trip to shoot other angles under different lighting. After all, a subject going on 100 deserves the flattering of every precious wrinkle.

Every piece of split siding, every crooked slat nailed to torn tarpaper. Every crumbling brick and sagging timber.

It was less than a week later, on a drizzly Saturday night, that Ralph Yost got a call that the house was burning. The hilltop flames could be seen for at least five or six miles.

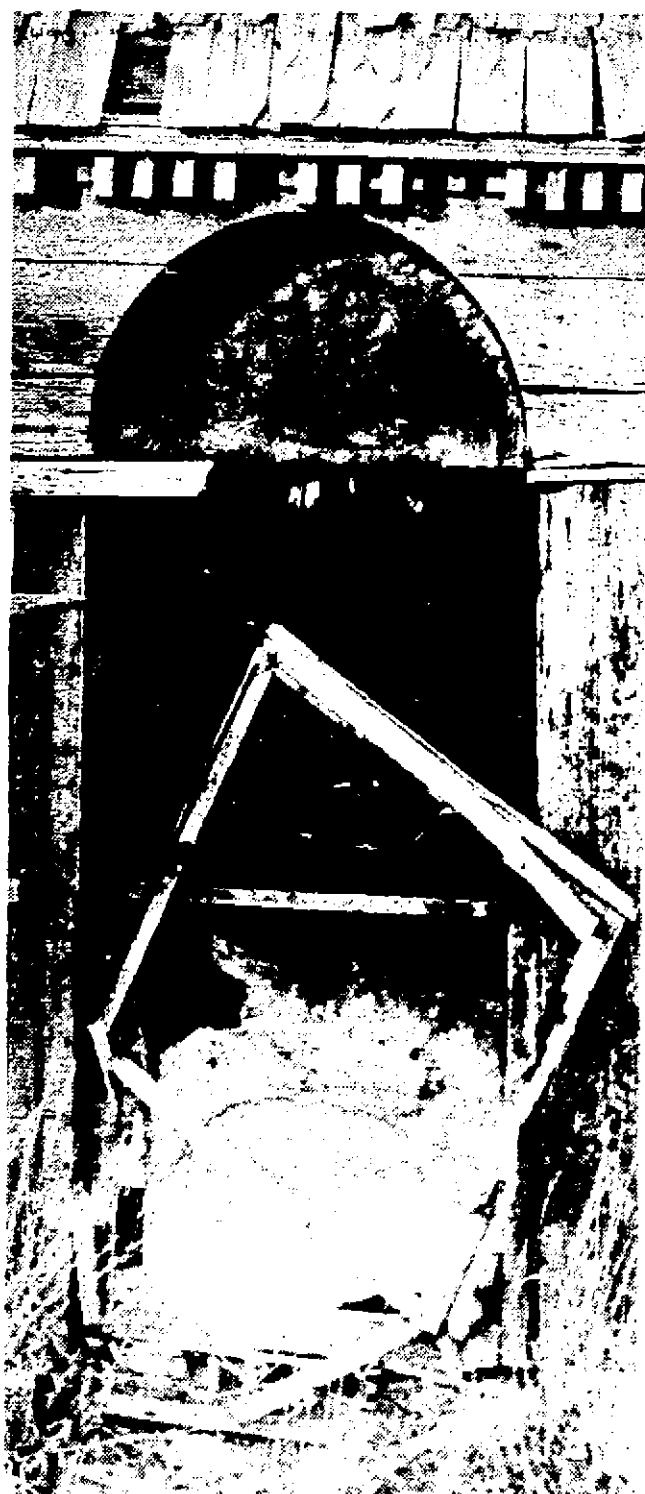

"The fire department came, but it was too late," said the owner. "We think some kids probably started it. People were always stopping by."

They stop no more. The showplace house, the onetime depot, the well-known dwelling of Henry on the Hill had sat for its last portrait.

Arched windows contrast with weathered boards and tin.

Story and

"Showplace of the country" was eye-catcher to the end.

Single-story part was originally Burlington depot.

Splits between agricultural concerns give funding drouth added force

By Dominick Costello
Farm Editor

The Agricultural Research Service (ARS) of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) is becoming a victim of the divisions in agricultural organizations.

ARS scientists find themselves facing growing demands from various commodity groups for new answers to the problems of agriculture. Honey producers want bee research, beef producers demand new cattle nutrition studies and crop farmers want a new disease resistant variety. They haven't been willing to support each others' cause.

It is a bit like a community that will supply water to the local fire truck to fight grass fires, but refuses to raise funds to replace the fire truck or to buy gas for it.

Two days of interviews with a wide variety of ARS personnel in Washington, D.C., Beltsville, Md., and Nebraska, both on and off the record, indicate that the agricultural research arm at the national level needs more support from farmers than it is getting.

Lynn Datt, a White House representative for agricultural and rural domestic policy, indicated that President Carter is sympathetic toward the researchers. He listed an examination of agricultural research capability and goals on an equal level with an overhaul of the Public Law 480 program and an overhaul of the agreement disaster program as "priority items."

Big operation

ARS is a big operation with 450 scientists at Beltsville alone. Many more are scattered across the United States at other federal and state research stations, working on projects that range from plant disease to energy.

"They are a dedicated bunch of people who work hard without much regard to their hours. They deserve a break in the form of funds for more people and newer equipment," said one administrator.

Another administrator noted that the average piece of research equipment is at least 9 years old. "Some of it is so outdated we have to have parts hand made for it. We have a lot of stuff on the books that is so antiquated as to be virtually useless," he said.

One critical area is the seed inventory laboratory at Beltsville, which houses an international collection of more than 80,000 varieties of small grains collected from all parts of the world.

"The lack of space has prevented us from even unpacking some of the seed we have received. I hope we can move some of this to another building, but it has to be kept around 40 degrees or it will be lost. In the meantime we do the best we can," said a secretary.

Dr. George White, head of the Germplasm Resources Laboratory, is fearful that some genetic material will be ruined unless better facilities and more help becomes available.

Illustrating the grass fire attitude, White noted that the collection of seeds around the world declined until the corn blight scare surfaced a few years ago. "We did get some extra funding then, but interest is starting to lag a bit again," he said.

Just one factor

Money is just a part of the problem. The personnel problem caused by limits on hiring adds to the frustration. "We are unable to hire technicians. We can pay one scientist the same as about three technicians. If I can hire only one man it is going to be a scientist, even if I have to have him wash bottles part of the time," said Dr. Steven King, deputy administrator of ARS.

King noted that only scientists can do the research planning to keep a program running.

There have been some improvements, but they tend to be piecemeal. Dr. Paul Coe at the Ruminant Nutrition Laboratory has a computer to do calculations that would take months to do by hand.

"It gives me time to plan and think that would otherwise be spent doing endless calculations," he said.

Dr. Gerald Coe is working on sugar beet research. He has a brand new roof on one greenhouse, but is frustrated by lack of resources for some of his projects.

Coe's best is pretty good. He has developed a technique for finding sugarbeets with increased yield potential, and is working on a new variety that shakes off dirt and has the potential for longer storage at sugar beet plants.

A variety of wind and solar energy projects are underway, but an effective means of storing the energy these machines harvest from the sun and wind is lacking.

Dr. Louis Liljedahl thinks a heat exchange system offers some of the answers.

Liljedahl also is working on an irrigation pump using a Canadian-developed windmill, and is trying two types of windmills to generate power for home heating.

"One is an electrical system and the other is a gear driven system running a heat pump. He is using the wind power collectors to test the potential of wind power and how it might relieve the oil-powered energy systems we now use."

Other scientists are working on nutrition data that involve as many as 1,300 individual tests on a single beef carcass. "It is the most massive nutrition study ever made on beef. When it is done, we will be sure the nutrition data on the label on meats is really accurate," said Dr. Katsuto Ono.

Many of these projects have been given a financial push from various groups. But they lack an overall funding of maintenance and renovation. Administrators call the one time funding soft money. What they desperately need is money for long-term renovation programs to update equipment and buildings, many of which were built in the 1930's.

One problem that frustrates many scientists is zero-based budgeting. Basically, it forces them to short-term goals rather than long-term basic research.

"Unless you can produce a fairly positive result with a 90% chance of success, you just can't get the funds. It makes long-term planning difficult," said one scientist.

Teams preferred

Team research seems to be the preferred method of approaching farm production problems. A dozen scientists of several disciplines will look at every aspect of soybean production for example, but even with this approach it usually takes 10 to 15 years to develop a new variety of soybeans.

Administrators say they need an annual increase of about $400 million for a live or six year period just to renovate the buildings at Beltsville. Additional funding would be needed to replace and update antiquated equipment.

Dr. Gerald Coe has little to work with at his laboratory in Beltsville, Md., because of a shortage of agricultural research funds. But with the little he does have, his research has been very productive.

They also need $1 million to build a new seed storage facility. Additional money is needed to expand the staff to enable them to do a better job of keeping track of the seed inventory.

If the various agricultural groups that use ARS as its scientific arm would support each other, the money probably could be gotten from Congress.

"Whenever a group convinces Congress they need funds, we get them. This is on a project-by-project basis. What we really need is overall funding for renovation and manpower that isn't tied to a specific project. We have had some improvement, but we need more," said Dr. King.

Money-making mail order schemes often fraudulent

By Bill Krefel

"Would you like to make $55,000 in the next 90 days?"

"Would you like to make $406,900 in the next 50 days?"

Perhaps you'd rather "made a stack of cash" by stuffing envelopes at home.

With lures like these being mailed daily to thousands of people across the U.S. — "a person has two chances of making any real money," according to Senior Lincoln Postal Inspector Paul Smith, "Slim and none — mostly none."

The 33-year-old Smith investigates questionable mailings that in some cases can constitute outright fraud. In his opinion, many "work at home schemes" and mail order "millionaires clubs" are just that.

Smith says mail of that type "is pretty constant" in the area of Nebraska which he and two other inspectors cover out of Lincoln. Their territory extends as far north as Thedford, as far west as Imperial, and south to the Kansas line.

He said the work-at-home play usually involves an offer to show people how to make money by doing something in return for a fee.

"For that, those people receive a list of places to write that might be interested in having that kind of work done, then those places also ask for money, in return for which the person gets another list of places that might be interested. Usually, the person never does find a way to make any money at home," he explained.

Smith said there can be exceptions to the fraudulent intent. He cited the case of a Lincoln man who sent out "several hundred" offers to help people find home work in return for a $4 fee. Smith said for that money, those people got a list of other places they could write to.

"He was a religious man, a church deacon, I think, and he apparently believed that he was actually providing a service — that people would find work in that way."

Smith said the man refunded his fee to everyone who had registered a complaint with the Postal Service and agreed to stop the operation.

The inspector also recalled a case involving a 13-year-old boy from Beatrice who sent out five such mailing offers before one individual filed a complaint. Smith said the youth "decided to get out of that business" after postal authorities visited him.

The "millionaires clubs," Smith explained, are "chain letter" types of operations whereby a person purchases various one-page reports on how to make money from three or four individuals who are named on a list mailed to him. The person then has a printer duplicate those reports, removes the last person's name from the list, moves the others down, puts his own name at the top, and sends out several hundred — or several thousand — mailing offers of his own.

The theory is that each recipient of the offer can become a part of the chain and profit from selling duplicates of the reports they've purchased.

Smith said it doesn't take much imagination to see that if each person who received such a mailing participated in it, sent out a thousand offers of his own and each of those recipients did likewise, "you'd soon outstrip the population of the country and the world. I don't see how the seller could ever fulfill his promise to make all of those people rich," he remarked.

He also noted that one person often will control two or three of the names and addresses on the list, thereby standing to make even more money from those gullible enough to participate.

Smith cited one such case prosecuted in Tennessee during the past year. One man controlled the top three names on a list and sent out some 150,000 mailings. He is now serving a sentence in a federal penitentiary, Smith said.

The inspector said such operators normally get their original mailing lists from firms that sell special lists of persons who fall into certain income or occupation categories.

Smith said that while the legality of a mailing must be decided in each case by the U.S. Attorney, statements that "millionaires club" offerings are lawful are not true.

"It's like a used car salesman telling you that a particular car was owned by a little old lady who drove it very little," he commented.

Smith said the investigations of about 50 questionable mail complaints, a year comprises about 10% of the Lincoln inspection office's work. The bulk consists of mail theft cases, usually involving government checks, he said.

Lincolnite wins art scholarship

Omaha (AP) — A Lincoln student has won a scholarship, and nine other Nebraskans gold medals, in the regional National Art Award Scholarship competition, national judge Alan Baer of Omaha said Wednesday.

Shelley Bartek, 18, a student at Lincoln East High School, was named winner of a scholarship from the Kansas City Art Institute.

The nine gold medal winners from Nebraska were:

Lisa Simmonds, Falls City High School; Cheryl Randall, Bancroft Junior High School, Omaha; Linda Truesdell, Brownell-Talbot High School, Omaha; Linda Corell, Bryan Junior High School, Omaha; Roxanne Rhoads, Bryan Junior High School, Omaha; Mike Hamer, Monroe Junior High School, Omaha; Vicki Markley, Monroe Junior High School, Omaha; Melanie Balaban, Norris Junior High School, Omaha; and Kris Kammerer, Northwest High School, Omaha.

In addition, Nancy Lunt of Omaha Burke High School won the $100 Hallmark Honor Prize with a pencil drawing; and Jerry McBride of Lincoln Northeast won the Kodak Medallion of Excellence for photography.

Honorable mention certificates were awarded to 15 Nebraska students.

Omaha man held without bond for hit and run

Omaha (UPI) — Air Force Sgt. Victor Gutertz, 24, was being held without bond in connection with a hit and run incident which involved the death of an Omaha man, police said Saturday.

Gutertz turned himself in at the Air Force security office and Omaha police took him into custody.

In a statement to police, Gutertz said he left the scene of an accident that killed Ernie Ramos, 37, because he "became afraid."

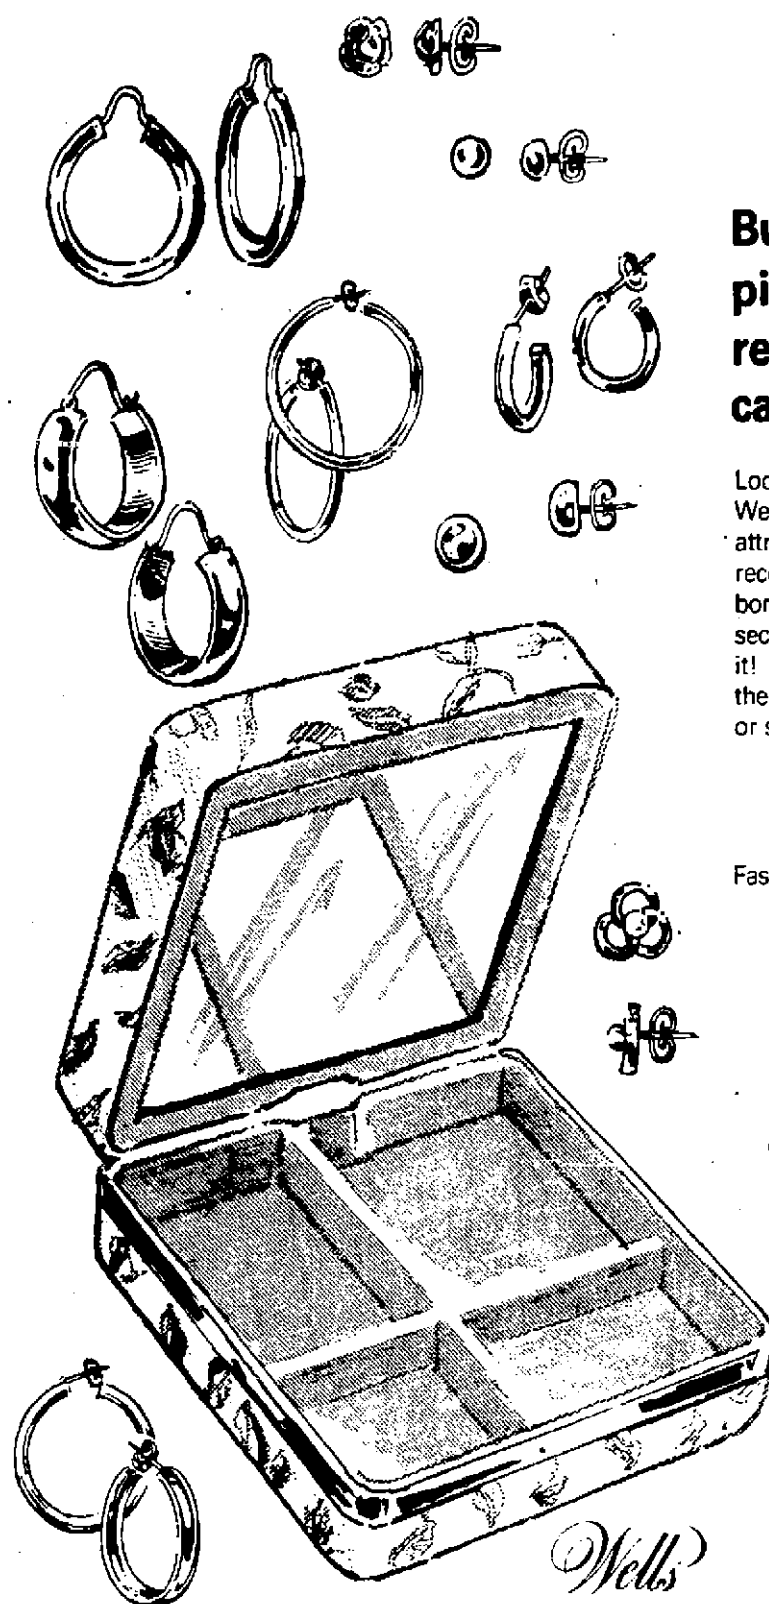

Police said Gutertz was charged with misdemeanor homicide and leaving the scene of a personal injury accident.

Gutertz's pickup truck allegedly ran over Ramos who was lying in a North Omaha street. Ramos was pronounced dead on arrival at Lutheran Hospital.

Police said they were uncertain why Ramos was lying in the street.

Education Log

By Jack Kennedy

Open learning concept

University of Mid-America (UMA) officials may get an attentive ear when they visit new U.S. Commissioner of Education Ernest Boyer later this month.

Boyer makes no promises about support for the multi-state experiment in using television, newspapers and other media to reach adults.

But conversation with him and with Harold Hodgkinson, outgoing director of UMA's major funding source, the National Institute of Education (NIE), indicate the Lincoln-born open learning concept is attractive and will survive despite the fact it sought $2 million from NIE and got $1.2 million.

Boyer is no newcomer to the extended learning philosophy. As State University of New York chancellor before he was sworn in April 1 as education commissioner, he launched the nationally-known Empire State College off-campus degree program. "I'm not in the office of schools, I'm in the Office of Education," he told a recent Education Writers Assn. seminar in Washington, D.C.

With this conviction that education is broader than the four walls, UMA president D. B. Varner might find Boyer more than willing to listen to the midwest consortium's funding woes and long-range hopes. Education must think in global, anticipatory terms, Boyer added.

Bodies enrolled not crucial

Boyer, in pre-lunch conversation, wanted to know more about UMA and its health. Varner is disappointed that the effort has not drawn more than about 6,000 students for in-home courses. Boyer, however, seemed to feel that bodies actually enrolled for credit are not crucial if persons who might not otherwise be interested in schooling are reached.

Hodgkinson said that before a speech to the education writers that the Midwestern multi-media approach "ought to have a chance to prove itself." As NIE head he supported the consortium and urged long-range funding. "They'd be crazy to cut it off," Hodgkinson said.

The ex-NIE director said UMA was not given its federal money to buy existing programs but to create new learning approaches. "It bought and modified six programs, but produces several others of its own."

Non-federal funding and a full-time president for UMA must be provided, said Hodgkinson. He also is not as concerned about enrollment as he is course quality and ability to reach older or non-traditional students who want it.

Washington footnotes:

Secretary Boyer, a personable, articulate, firm man, wants to cut red tape and build bridges so units of the U.S. Office of Education will talk to each other. This should be good news for taxpayers and educators.

The "basics" which so many are talking about, he said, are "only a tool, the raw materials. It's not the end, it's the means to real education."

New University of Nebraska president Ronald Roskens, education association sources at the seminar said, disavowed to them two months ago any interest in the full-time presidential spot he got April 16.

Days before the Nebraska regents made their choice, Roskens reportedly was among the finalists for president of Kent State University, where he was executive vice president before being named University of Nebraska at Omaha chancellor in 1972. Washingtonians contacted praised the new NU president's candor and leadership ability.

Airconditioning on County Bd. agenda

Approval of bids for airconditioning the third floor of Lancaster Manor is on the agenda for next Tuesday's meeting of the Lancaster County Board.

Other agenda items include:

Approval of cancellation of a Lancaster Mental Health Center warrant dated April 19, 1977, for $8.05 to the Interlibrary Loan Dept. due to an incorrect vendor.

Approval of a change order to Garrett Construction Co. on the remodeling of the County Commissioner's hearing room lowering the final cost by $215.

Approval of exchange of Joint Custody Receipts to Union Bank in the amount of $25,000.

Approval of the release of a Joint Custody Receipt to First National Bank due to overpledging of securities.

Consideration of a request from the county weed control fund and bridge and special road fund for transfer of funds to cover increased salaries during the present fiscal year from the salary adjustment account.

Region's governors meet in Omaha to talk water

Omaha (UPI) — Missouri River basin states governors will be in Omaha Tuesday and Wednesday to discuss regional water issues.

Six of the seven governors will be attending the second Missouri River Basin Governors' Conference on Water to be held in conjunction with the regular quarterly meeting of the Missouri River Basin Commission.

Governors expected to attend are J. J. Exon, Nebraska, conference host, Richard F. Kneip, South Dakota; Joseph P. Teasdale, Missouri; Arthur Link, North Dakota; Thomas Judge, Montana; and Ed Herschler, Wyoming, and possibly Gov. Richard Lamm of Colorado.

Topics will include interstate drought, the role of state governments in determining national water policy, implications of potential energy development, and regional input to the National Conference on Water.

A total of 3,940 persons have taken State University of Nebraska (SUN) multi-media courses at home since the program began in October, 1974, says SUN Dean Milton Hassel in a report to the Nebraska Educational Television Commission.

SUN is "just on the threshold" of really blossoming after 2½ years of the open learning experiment, he said. Ron Hull, program manager for the ETV network, said viewer mail and other sources indicate many more may benefit from the courses but not enroll for credit.

An example is a Baltimore, Md., woman who saw two SUN programs on a trip through Nebraska. She returned home, then wrote to ask if the courses could somehow be beamed to Baltimore — a little out of the range of the Nebraska network's transmitters.

Course completion in recent years has ranged from 93% to 50%, Hassel said. Some students have taken 21 hours of college credit over 2½ years. Some Lincoln SUN programs have gotten high Nielsen ratings in audience surveys, Hull added.

Courses with the highest credit enrollments to date have been accounting 1, 817; learning disabilities, 523; computer science, 195, and psychology 1, 468.

Non-credit course enrollment includes applied sketching, 94; freehand sketching, 395; sewing, 376, and writing, 83.

Hassel said 69% of the current enrollment is in credit courses. Average age is 37; the oldest student is 87. Largest single percentage of students is in the 25-34 age bracket.

Three out of four students are female and married.

About 60% had some previous college experience, Hassel said; 18% had taken another SUN course. Twelve percent had previous graduate courses; a third only completed high school. A total of 37% said they did not desire a college degree.

Studies show 35% of the students are in cities, another 35% in small towns or on farms and ranches.

Alteration of odometers charged

The Nebraska attorney general's office has filed an action alleging an Omaha used car dealer has altered the odometers of 16 vehicles.

Jerald Fennell of the consumer protection division filed the action in Douglas County District Court against C. Carroll Long, who operates Carroll Long Auto Sales.

The state's petition asks for an injunction to stop Long from continuing the alleged misrepresentation of mileage of vehicles he has on sale.

The courses using television, print media and tape recordings could spark interest in on-campus study, Hassel said. A mailing describing new fall SUN courses is being prepared for Nebraska colleges.

SUN is one unit of the six-state University of Mid-America consortium. Public libraries, free incoming telephone lines so students can question instructors, and area learning centers at Lincoln, Kearney, Scottsbluff and Omaha supplement the program. Part-time faculty course consultants are recommended by the University of Nebraska.

Since Jan. 1, SUN has been an administrative unit of the UNL Division of Continuing Studies, not a separate entity.

Emergency home repair available outside 'targets'

By Jim Aucoin

The federal government has told Lincoln to confine its emergency home-repair program for low-income homeowners to residents of seven specific "target" areas, and that leaves those living in other parts of the city with few places to turn for such help.

The Urban Development Dept. was told in a memo from the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) that the Crisis Intervention program, funded by block grants, should be limited to recipients in Havelock, West Lincoln, Clinton, Malone, Near South, University Place and South Salt Creek neighborhoods.

Those areas had been identified by the city as targets for community development improvement.

Until early April, when HUD made its ruling, the program had been citywide, drawing about 50% of its applicants from outside the target areas, according to Joe Turek, program coordinator.

The program offered grants of up to $1,000 for emergency home repairs. Through the Inspections Dept., companies would contract to do the work.

"We used licensed, insured contractors, qualified to do the technical work," said Turek. "I don't know of any program that will duplicate it (for persons living outside the target areas)."

Turek said that about 75 applications have been received since the program started last summer. Twenty-eight have been processed and contracts have been let.

One program which hopes to pick up the gap is the Red Cross Labor Co-op Program.

Formerly the Lincoln Labor Co-op, the program plans to continue to use volunteers.

June Osborne, coordinator, explained that projects must relate to a health and safety hazard, relocation or home deterioration and recipients must be elderly, low-income or handicapped.

She said the type of work the co-op does will depend on the type and number of volunteers it has.

Once a job is proposed and

NEWS of the Neighborhoods

the guidelines are met, "if we can find a qualified volunteer, then we will agree to try to do it," she said.

She emphasized they will try not to overlap other services. Recipients must be referred to them through other agencies.

The program is funded by a $4,000 grant from the Lincoln Foundation and $1,000 each from the city and the county. When this funding runs out next April, Mrs. Osborne said, the Red Cross will determine if the volunteer organization should assume full responsibility for it.

Red Cross hopes to draw upon students and church and civic organizations for volunteers.

Other programs which can offer limited help are the Handman program and the county welfare department's home repair service.

Handyman contracts with retired persons to do minor repair and maintenance jobs, said Director Harold Mahaffey.

Ex-pitcher Don Newcombe will speak on alcoholism

One of the first blacks to break the color barrier in major league sports in 1949 will be the speaker at the 15th annual meeting of the Lincoln Council on Alcoholism and Drugs (LCAD).

Don Newcombe will visit schools, hospitals, appear on radio and television as well as speak at the LCAD dinner at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the Lincoln Hilton.

Newcombe, with the old Brooklyn Dodgers, was the first Cy Young Award winner in 1956 for outstanding pitcher. In 1949, he was voted rookie of the year by both the Baseball Writers Assn. and Sporting News.

Through his career he pitched 149 winning games, but Recipients must be over 60 and pay on a sliding scale, he said. The workers are paid $4 an hour.

The program is funded with city, county and federal monies.

The welfare program is "very limited," according to assistant administrator Donald Williamson.

He said grants of up to $500 are available to homeowners receiving welfare payments. Repairs must be necessary to the health and welfare of the recipients. He said they do nothing of a cosmetic nature, not even house painting.

Aid to Dependent Children recipients are limited to a $500 lifetime maximum. Adult handicapped recipients are restricted to a maximum of $500 for each job, but there is no lifetime limit. All projects must be approved by the State Welfare Dept.

Williamson pointed out that few repairs can be done for $500. The new limitations of the Crisis Intervention program "presents severe problems for those outside target areas who have more than $500 worth of work to do," he said, emphasizing that elderly homeowners will be particularly hard hit.

Don Newcombe on the way to becoming a baseball legend he also became an alcoholic. Newcombe now travels widely speaking on alcohol, its effects, and his personal experience with the disease.

Improving of Malone neighborhood suggested

A consultant has met with residents of the Malone neighborhood and outlined some improvements he thinks should be made.

Hired to plan the city's federally-funded community development work in Malone, Gerald Luedtke of Detroit suggested that the controversial Northeast Radial should be aligned along 19th St., following the Rock Island railroad track path rather than bisecting the neighborhood.

He also said a comprehensive traffic and street plan needs to be developed for the area, pointing out that the streets need widening.

He said zoning in the area is hodgepodge and a new zoning plan which would better coordinate land use should be developed.

Luedtke asked the residents to write out how they would like to see the neighborhood developed. They will meet next month to discuss the individual plans.

Other recommendations Luedtke made are:

- Use the land purchased for the radial to build residential dwellings on instead.
- Dress up University of Nebraska-Lincoln parking facilities.
- Do facelifting on the businesses along O St. at the southern end of Malone.
- Upgrade the Malone Center.
- Improve playground areas.
- Establish a new grocery store with lengthier hours in the neighborhood.
- Preserve the abundance of churches.
- Possibly swap university-owned land and city-owned land in the area to ensure orderly development of the neighborhood.

Council might debate creation of consolidation commission

For the third time in as many weeks the City Council may debate the creation of a special commission to write a charter for a consolidated city-county government during its regular weekly meeting Monday afternoon.

Last week the Council voted 4-3 to reject a proposal for a 21-member panel to draft a charter proposal.

In breaking the deadlock on the issue that had occurred the week before, Councilman Steve Cook said he would be back this week with a compromise proposal to replace the one he voted against.

However, at week's end Cook said he still had not formulated his compromise proposal on the merger panel so it was uncertain whether the issue will come up for reconsideration this week after all.

Other items on the agenda for the Council's 1:30 p.m. Monday meeting are:

Second Reading Public Hearing

Final Plans — Accepting and approving plat of Seaford Inc. near Calvert and 10th Sts.

Accepting and approving plat of Colonial Hills 12th Add. near 70th and Old Cheney Rd. — Amending City Code relating to water services to areas outside city limits.

Five women will manage service station

By Linda Ulrich

The Amazons, according to Greek tradition, were a race of warlike women who made slaves of the men they captured.

The women working at Amazon Amoco at 11th and B are of a different ilk.

Billed as the first automobile service station in the state to be managed by women, Amazon Amoco is by women, for women (men are welcome too).

"The name started as a joke and then it wasn't," explained Kathy Allen, one of five women who will be pumping gas and servicing cars part-time.

"We'll sort of be role models as well as making money and having great fun," said Deb Stephen, who will work fulltime in the station.

The women see it as a real challenge because none of them has had any previous experience working in a gas station.

In addition to salaries, the employees receive 1/4 of the profits from the station. Salem Oil Co. owns the station, and after six months, the employees will have the option to purchase.

"We're hoping it will be collective decision making with the women having equal say in prices, the kinds of products carried and how we do business," said Dick Salem.

The gasoline, 94 octane, will sell for a nickel less than that sold at other Standard gasoline stations. Price at the opening is 59.9, compared to 64.9 at most other Standard stations.

Tune-ups, safety inspections and trouble shooting are among the services the station will offer. Major overhauls will not be done.

The building has been refurbished from top to bottom with carefully chosen color schemes and products. Vending machines will offer fruit and nuts.

The only male directly involved in the operation is Michael B. Lefholtz who will serve as a mechanical consultant. He will help train the employees to work on cars and will teach preventative auto care seminars for men and women.

According to Lefholtz, preventative car care classes will provide the two things for the public: a general familiarity with the major components of a car and a sense of what's involved in fixing particular parts.

"I'm not very interested in teaching people how to change a tire. I'm more interested that they understand what's going on with their car — taking the mystery out of automobiles, so to speak," he said.

The station also offers bay (hydraulic hoist) and tool rentals for those who wish to do work themselves.

The station has a selection of the special tools most people wouldn't own as well as basic hand tools and wrenches and sockets for rent or sale.

"The basic rule for do-it-yourself is that bay rental will be limited to jobs that take half a day or less, Lefholtz said. Pulling an engine or extensive work will not be done.

Lefholtz also will be available to tell customers what's involved in a certain procedure if they want to do it themselves.

"I'm not a magical trainer of mechanics," he said. "But some operations are simple and some people may enjoy doing them and may do them better than someone else."

The educative aspect is important to the philosophy behind the station, Salem added.

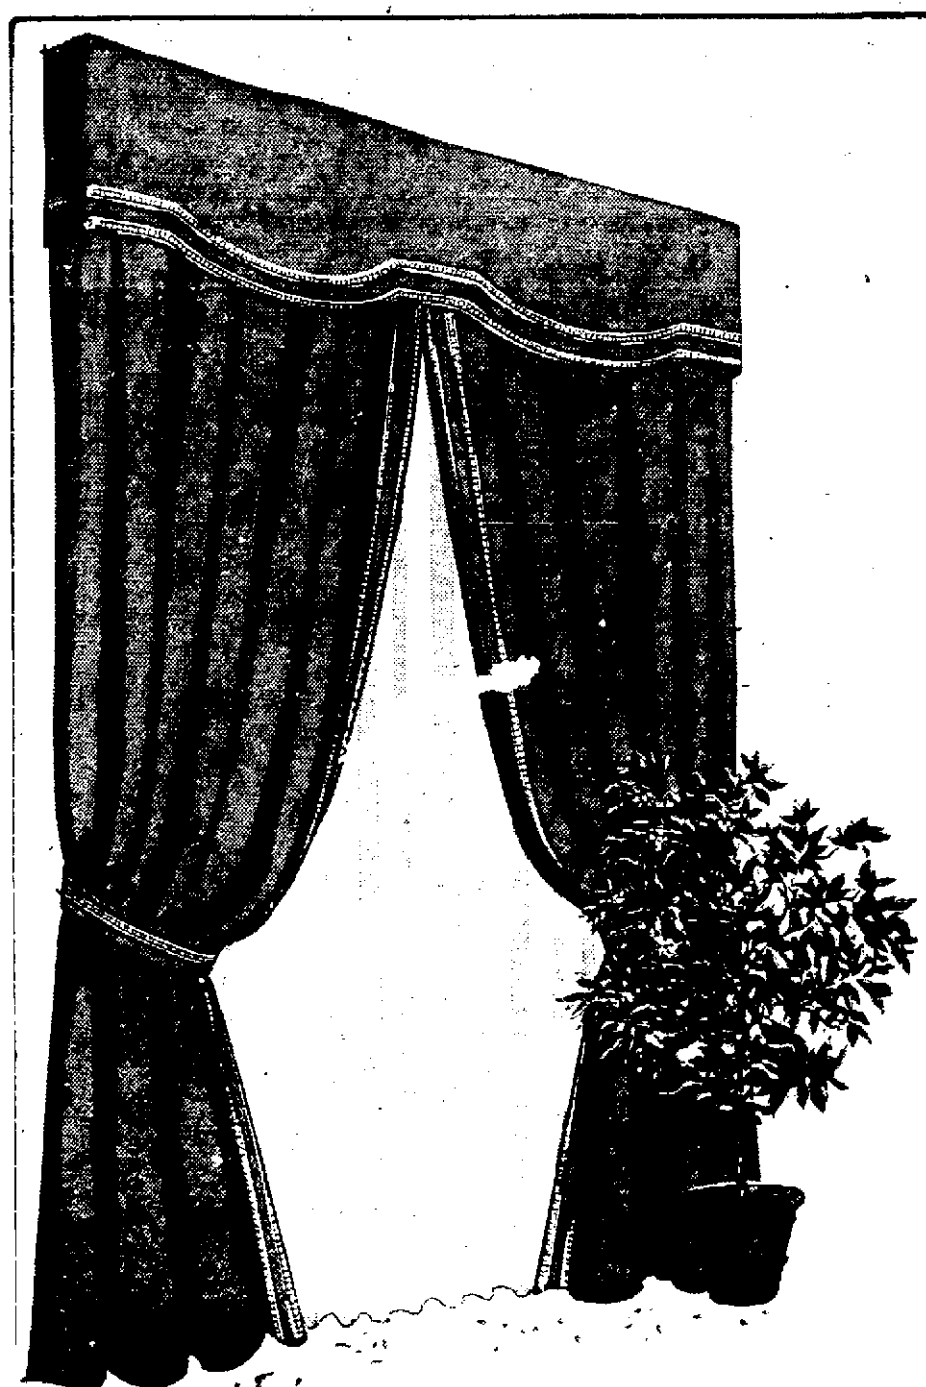

"I see women taking some real hard steps in terms of getting away from stereotypical roles but when it comes to cars, a car fixer is usually a man using jargon a woman doesn't understand and often doesn't want to understand," he said.

And Amazon Amoco is out to change that.

Today is opening day. Flowers and nuts will be given away to all patrons.

Working on their gas station, the Amazon Amoco, are Michael Lefholtz (with beard), Deb Stephen (below) and Kathy Allen, on ladder, masking windows on the service bay doors before painting them.

Catholic bishops juggle proposals

New York (AP) — Roman Catholic bishops are juggling hot potatoes not sure just what to do with them. They'll offer their first public reaction next week to the sizzling bundle of proposals for changes in the church.

The ingredients were served up through an unprecedented, representative church process that the bishops initiated. But they've been variously jolted, gratified and distressed at the outcome.

Some applaud it with qualifications; others deplore it. Collectively, they'll work out their initial response to it at the spring meeting May 2-5 in Chicago of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops.

For "the first time they ask their children to be open and honest with them and they went into parental shock at what they heard," writes columnist Dolores Curran in the Catholic Messenger of Davenport, Iowa.

The sweeping array of recommendations were drawn up by a national assembly of 1,340 diocesan delegates at a "Call to Action Conference" last October in Detroit, the culmination of two years of hearings and consultations throughout the church.

Among the 182 recommendations, the bishops were urged:

- To petition the Vatican to allow ordination of married men.
- To support admission of women to the priesthood.
- To "affirm more clearly the right and responsibility of married people to form their own consciences" about using contraception.
- To back passage of the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.
- To permit divorced, remarried Catholics to receive holy communion.

Evangelistic efforts abound in Nebraska

By Anita Fussell

After decades of dormancy, evangelism shows signs of new life in America's more liberal denominations.

Nebraska examples abound. The United Methodists, for instance, now have an evangelist working with churches in the state. This week in Omaha, the Lutheran Church in America spent a good portion of its annual synod explaining and promoting a $1 million project, Evangelical Outreach.

The first evangelism officer for the Episcopal Church will speak this month in Nebraska. And last fall, Roman Catholic parishes in Lincoln conducted a neighborhood outreach project, Operation Faith Sharing.

Though such stirrings are just now becoming evident, they reflect policy shifts and money commitments by socially active denominations. They also reflect new interest in membership growth by mainline churches finishing a ten-year slide in membership. Just maybe, according to recent polls, membership is beginning another long haul upward.

Evangelism as defined by these groups is not a dramatic confrontation of the sinner with the true gospel. Nor is it a heady trip into the world of Bible prophecy. Directed more toward the needs than the sins of people, this new-style evangelism stresses application of faith to everyday life.

It may even give a firmer spiritual foundation to social action, according to the Rev. Harold Hamilton of First Lutheran Church. He said participants in Evangelical Outreach may decide "injustice is in opposition to my spirituality."

A joint venture of the Lutheran Church in America and the American Lutheran Church, Evangelical Outreach is designed "to help us grow in and deepen our faith and to be able to talk about it," said the Rev. Dr. Reuben Swanson, president of the LCA Nebraska Synod. Small group meetings form the core of the project, which also uses radio and newspaper ads.

The New York Times reports that churches in Toledo, Ohio, experienced a 21% increase in attendance after a recent four-week Evangelical Outreach campaign.

To arouse similar enthusiasm in Nebraska, pastoral evangelist, the Rev.

Harold Skillrud spoke twice on behalf of the project at the LCA Nebraska Synod.

Episcopalians also are stepping up their evangelism efforts here. They have invited the Rev. Wayne Schwab, evangelism officer of the Episcopal Church, to speak to the diocesan committee on evangelism May 13.

"Our primary purpose at this moment is to assist parishes in development of evangelism programs," said the Rev. Samuel R. Boman, vicar of St. David's Church and chairman for the evangelism committee.

"We're also taking a look at church growth principles and just where we are in Nebraska — laying the groundwork for lay teams," he said.

Roman Catholic lay teams were active last August, calling on neighbors "to get acquainted and invite them to an October open house," said the Rev. Charles J. Keenan of Blessed Sacrament Church.

He described Operation Faith Sharing as a combined ecumenical-evangelism outreach. Members of Blessed Sacrament, he said, contacted 600 to 700 people, so "we were somewhat disappointed when around 100 came to the open house, but the project was a good thing for our people."

Fr. Keenan also is diocesan director of cursillos, a Spanish word meaning short course, a cursillo can be a race track, said Fr. Keenan, but in this case it is a short course in Christian leadership.

Began in Spain in 1958, the cursillo movement has had quite a growth in the Lincoln Diocese, he said. "We just completed two cursillo weekends at York, one for men and one for women. We ask people to continue in small groups that meet over breakfast or coffee for prayer, study and action."

Cursillos at times have been breeding grounds for charismatic prayer groups, he noted. They also have been responsible for introducing more joy into worship. The movement's motto is, "be a friend, make a friend, make a friend for Christ."

So the struggle of how to speak of God in a world come of age, which preoccupied much of Christendom in the recent past, may give way to a religious revival in the not too distant future.

At least sociologist Peter Berger of Rutgers thinks so. "The secularized view of the world is uncomfortable for humans," he maintains.

Nebraska Votes in Congress

Washington — Votes of area members of Congress on key roll calls for the week ending April 29, 1977, as recorded by Congressional Quarterly.

Senate

Tax Cuts. By a vote of 40-59, the Senate defeated a move to reduce permanently income tax rates in lower- and middle-income brackets by between 4% and 14%. The permanent cuts represented a Republican alternative to President Jimmy Carter's economic recovery plans, and the vote largely was along party lines.

The administration had strenuously opposed such permanent cuts, arguing they would fuel inflation and cost the U.S. Treasury billions of dollars needed for future initiatives in areas like welfare, health care and tax reform.

Supporters argued additional stimulus in the form of tax cuts was needed to reduce unemployment and sustain the economic recovery over the next several years. They claimed the cuts could help offset the effects of inflation, which moved many taxpayers into higher tax brackets.

Opponents disputed the economic arguments, claiming other portions of the President's package would prove sufficiently stimulative. They further labeled the amendment "an exercise in futility," predicting Congress would not be able to override a certain veto from Carter.

Voting for tax cut: Curtis (R).
Voting against tax cut: Zorinsky (D).

House

Defense Spending. In a victory for the Pentagon and Carter, the House voted 225-184 to raise a budget target for defense spending in fiscal year 1978 by $4.1 billion — to the $120.1 billion level requested by the President.

Supporters argued the President's request should be granted in light of a Soviet military buildup and the need to strengthen the U.S. position in arms limitation talks with the Soviets.

Opponents contended great restraint had been shown in recommending spending targets for domestic programs, that the increase would destroy the delicate balance of support necessary to pass the budget targets and that the recommended cuts would eliminate unnecessary Pentagon spending without weakening U.S. defenses.

Voting to increase defense spending targets: Smith (R), Thone (R).

Voting against increase in defense spending targets: Cavanaugh (D).

Troop Withdrawal. By a vote of 88-301, the House overwhelmingly rejected a move to withdraw 17,000 U.S. ground troops from foreign bases and to cut total troop strength by 50,000. The vote was on an amendment to the fiscal 1978 defense authorization bill.

Supporters of the reduction argued the troops could be removed from South Korea. They insisted American public opinion would not support a war in behalf of South Korea's military dictatorship.

Opponents said Carter already had pledged to remove the 50,000 U.S. ground troops from Korea over a five-year period. They warned passage of the amendment would undermine negotiations with Japan and South Korea to achieve that goal.

Voting for withdrawal of overseas troops: Cavanaugh (D).

Voting against withdrawal: Smith (R), Thone (R).

Lively babysitting class learns the hard way

Mrs. Louise Matson's fifth graders got a real test Friday at Brownell Elementary School, 60th & Aylesworth.

They now know what life's really like when an infant won't stop crying or diaper rash becomes epidemic.

For the past two weeks, the group has been taking a crash course in babysitting. They made games and toys for younger children. They read booklets on child-rearing techniques, discussed infant safety and what to do in an emergency when the parents aren't around.

Friday, the students got to deal with the real thing.

No educational rhetoric or teaching theory. A group of preschoolers was recruited for an hour, making Brownell even more livelier than usual.

The corps of trained babysitters knows it has passed the test now.

JET employment to aid disadvantaged students

Students from disadvantaged or low-income families who need employment through the summer and fall have until June 1 to apply for the JET (Job Experience Training) federally-subsidized program.

JET students, who are paid the federal minimum wage, must meet the U.S. Labor Dept. definition of economically disadvantaged, said Tom Novak of the JET office at Lincoln High School, 22nd & J Sts. They either must have been enrolled in school during the current year or be planning to enroll next fall, he said.

A variety of jobs are open, Novak said. JET students are office workers, teacher aides, park employees, maintenance workers and library helpers.

Several jobs are available for child care or other positions.

Early application is encouraged and efforts will be made to place students on the job as soon as possible. Novak said. Past JET programs have given 400 to 500 youths employment.

Road funds sought

The State Highway Commission voted Friday to seek federal funds to build a three mile access road to the new town of Niobrara. The project will cost $1.5 million. — UPI

Creek to be tested again

Rock Creek, north of Lincoln, will be tested again Monday to check anhydrous ammonia levels as the result of an overturned tanker truck that ruptured and leaked the gas. The State Environmental Control Dept. said ammonia levels probably would reach Salt Creek during the weekend and would remain high in Rock Creek until next week. The accident occurred Thursday on U.S. 77 when the truck swerved to avoid a car and struck a bridge. — UPI

Skipton is charged

James K. Skipton, 42, Omaha, has been charged with misdemeanor motor vehicle homicide in the death of Michael C. Kelly, 24, Omaha. Skipton's pickup truck was turning when it collided with Kelly's oncoming motorcycle. — UPI

Chalet update creates sweeping profile

By Andy Lang, AP

The height of this two-story house is minimized by its contemporary profile. One of the ways this has been achieved is by bringing down the eaves of the sweeping roofline to a one-story height.

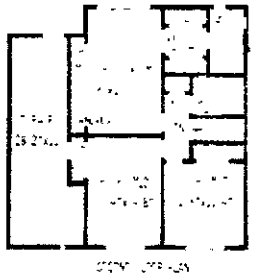

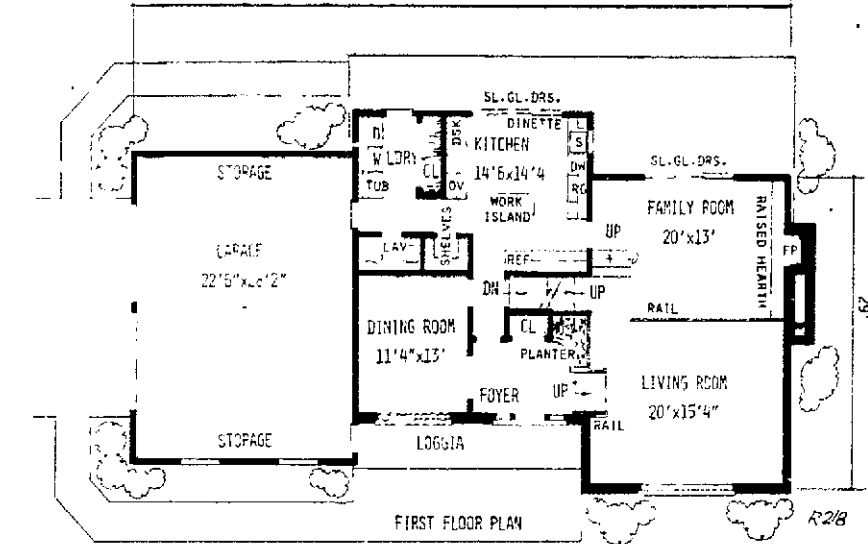

Visual interest is added to the front elevation by the implication of a secondary roofline at the right, although it actually is a narrow section over the front extension of the living room. What architect Derick B. Kipp has done is a kind of update of a traditional chalet silhouette, enabling it to fit in any type of residential area.

The entry to Design R-218 is protected by the cantilevered second story. The front door, with full-length sidelights, opens on to a central foyer, from which there is direct access to living and dining rooms as well as to the kitchen. The foyer features a corner planter at the foot of the stairs to the upper floor and a spacious coat closet.

One's attention is immediately drawn toward the raised level of the living room. The living room is raised four steps, and the use of wrought-iron railings enhances the view. A cathedral ceiling runs the depth of the house, visually combining living and family room areas.

The family room has a handsome fireplace on the far wall and sliding glass doors to a rear deck. This room is at the normal first-story level and has a door leading to the kitchen. The dining room is to the left of the foyer, with space-saving bi-folding doors connecting them. A second door leads from the dining room to the kitchen.

To the rear of the foyer, a short hallway leads to the kitchen. There are counters and cabinets as well as appliances along three walls. The rear wall is done in glass, with triple glass doors to the rear deck. In addition to the numerous cabinets in the kitchen, there is a pantry closet, plus counter space, supplemented by a central work-island unit. Family dining space is bright and cheery in front of the sliding glass doors. Off the kitchen, there is a spacious laundry room, with a full-size closet to store laundry and clean supplies. This area features a door to the backyard a service lavatory and a door to the garage.

The second floor has three bedrooms, two baths and a storage area over the garage. The master bedroom enjoys a choice rear location and has its own full bath and dressing room. The two front bedrooms share the family bath, which is

Garden Gossip

Frost still possible; guard those plants

- Stop to smell the flowers, share your May basket!
- Don't remove foliage from bulb plants after bloom.
- Try verticillate gardening with vine crops to save space.
- Break off seed stalks on rhubarb.
- Finalize annual flower garden plans.

By Brent Hoadley

County Agent—Horticulture
Are you a gambler? There is still a one in five, or 20% chance there will be a killing frost. By May 10 there is still a one in 10, or 10% chance of a late frost.

This means many of us may get caught with our plants in the garden if a frost warning is sounded.

Many things could be done to help prevent frost injury to plants in the garden. Turn on the irrigation over strawberry beds, as water freezes heat is lost. This heat protects the flowers. The ice will melt and the next day your plants will be healthy and well watered. Many times, watering with a fine mist the morning after a frost will help save some plants or blossoms.

Be sure to remove the "covers" when the temperature rises the next day.

Army troops still sought

Atlanta (AP) — The national Center for Disease Control, which is searching for Army troops exposed to a nuclear bomb test in Nevada in 1957, has received hundreds of calls about the search but none from persons involved in the test.

Airborne Division as part of a research project on whether low-dose radiation might be causing delayed leukemia.

About 1,100 persons — including about 250 members of the 504th — were at the Yucca Flats test site for the exercise in nuclear war training, said Dr. Glyn G. Caldwell, deputy chief of the cancer branch of the CDC.

ROAD TO WEALTH

A good deal of our tax money is used for roads. If the road funds are used wisely, it is money well spent. Communities and even countries can rise and fall on the basis of their roads. Roads carry the lifeblood of humanity, and have human qualities such as arteries and lifelines ascribed to them.

When buying raw land as an investment, take a hard look at available roads and planned highways. It has often been said that if investors just followed the route of proposed freeways in this country, and bought properly-priced future freeway frontage close to population centers, they could make a great deal of money.

What has this dissertation to do with real estate? Just this — roads (especially highways) increase the value of land in its path. Just as population pressure can create the need for roads, new roads can pave the way for population increases. This, in turn, increases the demand (and the price) of property.

Air conditioning outside room good way to save enepennies

Every aspect of gardening and landscaping should be carefully reexamined with enepennies in mind. What is an enepenny? It's the most important money in the world. It's money spent for any of the many forms of energy that are being so severely depleted today. A person who wastes an enepenny is involved in double waste. He's wasting not only his own resources but also those of the earth. The conservation of enepennies is obviously everybody's business. Let's now see how we can put trees and shrubs to work to save these most important pennies. First a shade pattern on a West or south roof helps to conserve air-conditioning enepennies in summer. Said in another way, a shade tree located in the right spot can work as an awning to keep harsh light out of the home and serve as insulation for the roof. Lawns expend enepennies in many ways. They use gas and oil for mowing, power-raking, aerating, etc. The fertilizers used on lawns take vast amounts of energy to produce. If the lawn must be sprayed repeatedly with chemicals for insects and diseases, all kinds of enepennies are lost. Obviously, a self-maintaining, energy-saving substitute for lawn should be used wherever possible. In some cases, this can be flowering shrubs that will cover large areas with little cost. In other cases, living ground covers, chipped rock or even concrete can be used. Of course, most of us already have experienced power blackouts or brownouts on hot days in summer when electrical facilities are simply not adequate to handle overloads. Most experts warn that, in time, these are sure to increase in frequency as well as intensify. The smart homeowner will, of course, air-condition a portion of his yard so that he has somewhere to hide when these emergencies strike. Since the conditions usually arise in late afternoon or early evening, the best place for your outside, naturally air-conditioned room is on the east side of your home where the ever increasing shade pattern from the house keeps you out of the hot sunshine. Be sure that nothing obstructs breezes, particularly those from the south. On extremely hot days, the wind is usually blowing from the south and your outdoor living room needs plenty of ventilation. If you need privacy because of neighbors or a street, by all means erect a fence or plant shrubs or trees. An adjustable, louvered fence will enable you to choose precisely the amount of privacy and ventilation you want. If shrubs are used for this purpose, cotoneaster acutifolia is an excellent choice. This plant lets air filter through its foliage, and it can be trimmed to precisely the right height to give the most privacy and the least obstruction to breezes. Once you've developed an outside air-conditioned room, you should use it as often as you can. Inside air-conditioning — the kind that expends electricity and gas — can become habit-forming. You'll find natural air conditioning a welcome relief to the confinement, even claustrophobia, of inside air conditioning. And, of course, you'll save many, many enepennies. Next Week: More on Landscaping and Enepennies.

Muti-use chair is perfect for home

By Steve Ellingson
Special Writer

Add this unusual chair to your household and you'll have a real conversation piece. Handy too! Originally designed in England for use in Elizabethan theatres, the chair made an easy Atlantic crossing to take up a new life in America as a school chair and fireside seat. In earlier years it was even referred to as a kibitzer chair, an expression long since retired from everyday slang. No matter how you use it — for an end table, reading a book, watching TV — the what-not chair is a perfect "home companion."

And it's a snap to build. All the pieces can be traced and cut out from our full-size pattern. Then all you do is assemble with glue and screws (we even mark the screw holes). The full-size pattern also includes photos, step-by-step instructions and a complete materials list. There's a spot for this versatile project somewhere in your home... wherever folks gather to relax, read or just chat.

BN to study accounting procedures

Washington (AP) — Burlington Northern has agreed to an order by the Securities and Exchange Commission to study its accounting procedures and change the way it discloses such things as deferred railroad maintenance plans to investors.

The railroad signed a consent order that neither admitted nor denied an SEC finding that it did not adequately inform investors of a decline since 1970 in the profitability of its freight business or the amount of deferred rail maintenance.

The regulatory agency said that since 1958 average replacements of rails and ties have been about half the levels of the 1940s and 1950s, and that as a result the railroad may be facing "disproportionately large" modernization needs in the future.

Besides operating the railroad, the company also develops natural resources and is a major land owner.

The SEC said that the contribution that the rail portion of the business made towards profits would have been materially reduced from 1970 through 1975 had it allocated fixed charges related to transportation in its reports on rail profits.

The study must be completed in six months, the SEC said.

New routes are ok'd for four airlines

Washington (AP) — The Civil Aeronautics Board authorized new routes for four airlines operating out of Denver.

Frontier Airlines was awarded nonstop authority between Denver and both Tulsa and Oklahoma City.

Braniff Airlines was awarded two routes: Denver-Oklahoma City - Tampa - Miami and Fort Lauderdale, and Denver-Oklahoma City-Atlanta.

Continental received authority for Denver-Tulsa-Tampa-Miami and Fort Lauderdale.

Delta was awarded Denver-Tulsa-Atlanta.

Homeward bound

Dale Schribner

Story as told to Betty Stevens

I'd been snuggled up to the side of a rolling hill south of Holland for almost 70 years.

Housed three-generations of the Lefferdink's and DeBoer's horses and cattle. Windows out. Door missing. Rain came in my roof and I needed paint.

Times were hard — and lonely — but I knew I had true grit. My 36-by 50-by 40-foot frame was solid, my internal structure good. I had heard my last owner, Dale Harlan say, "They don't build barns like that anymore."

But I didn't pay any attention to that kind of talk. I considered myself a has-been. I hadn't had hay in my loft for more years than I could remember. The net had rotted off the basketball hoop on my side ages ago.

Then one Saturday it dawned on me I still might have a future when the Dale Farabee family came and worked all day and part of the next to get my hayloft door lifted back in place.

But that was just a hint of things to come.

One day Dave Schribner and his moving crew from David City arrived, sturdied me with wooden beams, put jacks under me and hoisted my frame up off the foundation. It took them two days. I heard a new foundation had been built for me west of Holland at the Farabees and that I was going to become shelter for the Morgan horses they raised.

Harlan said moving buildings is a "real art."

Like an arthritic matron of the plains, my joints groaned when the two trucks hooked on to the dollies I rested on and started to move.

Workman from Norris Public Power District went ahead, taking power lines down on my approximately four-mile route. Sometimes they even had to pull up power line poles.

Farabee said it cost $10,000 for me, the move and my new foundation. I heard him say it will cost another $5,000-$10,000 to get me in shape with horse stalls, new windows and paint.

"I could have put up a metal building to shelter my horses for half that cost, but a metal building is not a good old barn like that." That's what Farabee said.

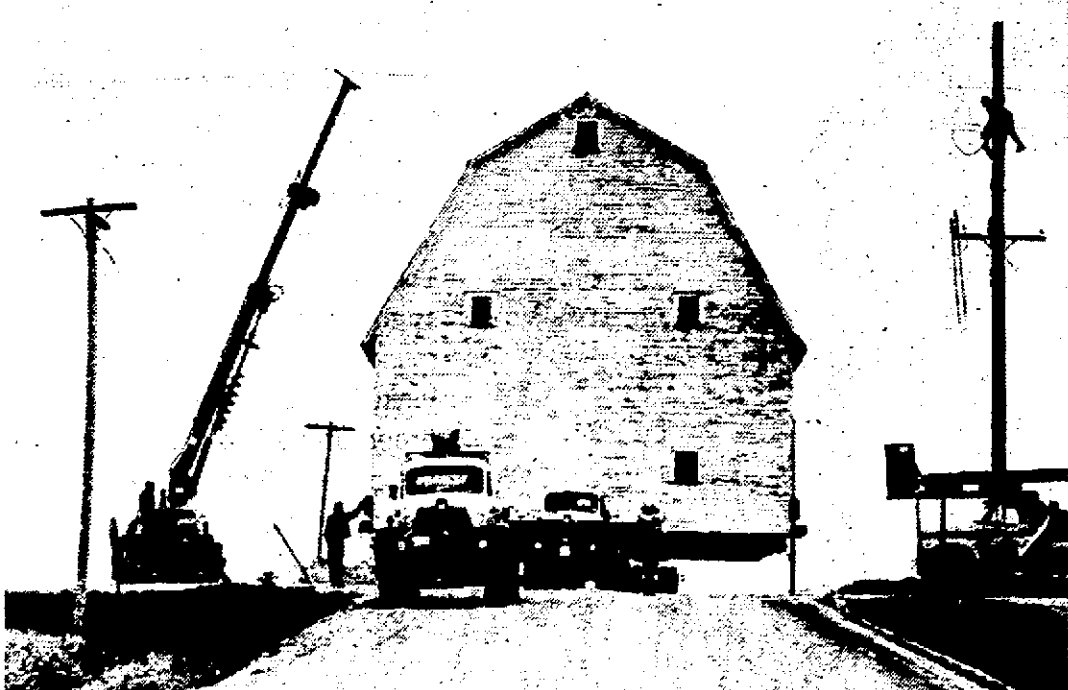

I felt like a wise old bride when we passed through Holland, past a church and houses that had been built long after I had become "obsolete."

Smart man, Harlan.

And now maybe the horses of three more generations will feed, sleep, give birth and grow within my shelter. What more could a good old barn ask?

At home
at last.

More of the bubbly going down

New York (AP) — People are drinking more champagne these days, a sign of changing tastes and a better economy, an industry spokesman says.

The Champagne News and Information Bureau, a trade group, reported Friday that shipments to the United States of the bubbly, expensive French wine rose 40.5% in 1976 over 1975.

Cheaper java

Skokie, Ill. (UPI) — Coffee drinkers who down three cups of vending machine brew daily can save about 72¢ a day if they carry their own from home in a vacuum bottle.

The manufacturer who came up with this statistic says it surveyed six major coffee companies to determine that coffee brewed at home costs about 6¢ a cup, compared with 30¢ a cup for the vending machine product.

The study by Aladdin Industries, Inc. showed homemakers average about 54 cups from a pound of coffee at an average price of $3 a pound.

Energy and money

Chicago (UPI) — Window shades can save up to 15% of the cost of heating and cooling homes, according to independent scientific tests at the Illinois Institute of Technology.

Researchers found that a drawn roller shade mounted inside a window frame can prevent 24-31% of the heat loss through glass in winter.

The study also found that a drawn roller shade on a sunlit window in summer admits 44 to 54% less total heat than an unshaded window.

slowly since each cigaret simply reinforces the addiction. Although they find it difficult to quit, they are often more successful at staying nonsmokers because they don't ever want to go through the agony again.

Habit: An almost automatic response, with little or no thought involved. Habit smokers often light up a new cigaret while the previous unfinished one is still burning in the ashtray. The habit smoker has a much easier time quitting. He has to make his smoking a conscious behavior (such as by wrapping up his pack or not carrying cigarets or matches) and ask himself each time, "Do I really want this cigarette?"

easier than the smoker had anticipated.

Psychological addiction: To fulfill a perceived "craving" for cigarets, which begins to grow the moment the last cigaret is stubbed out. Addicted smokers usually have to quit "cold turkey" - they can't cut down.

Generation gap

May it live a long and very happy life

(c) Newhouse News Service
New York — The generation gap, painful and disruptive as it may be, might be a necessity in modern society, according to a social researcher speaking on the state of the American family.

Although a variety of great social and economic changes have widened the generation gap in recent decades, efforts to eliminate it can force teenagers into unnaturally dependent relationships with their families or lead parents to abdicate their leadership role in the family. J. Burke Mealy told a meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric Assn.

"Once children have reached adolescent status, a generation gap, in the sense both of a distance between the generations and of increased ambiguity between them, is a necessary component of family development," Mealy said.

Ideally, the generation gap can allow teen-agers to acquire the competitive skills they will need as adults, without stripping them of protection they need.

At the same time, adults can retain their parental authority, while acknowledging that a rapidly changing world has endowed their children with skills the parents do not have — promoting a more graceful transition through middle-age both within the family and in the outside world.

"Thus, parents should give their teen-agers permission to take over important adult functions in the family, from fixing the car to planning the route the family takes on vacation — if the youngsters prove themselves as competent as their parents at doing these things, Mealy said.

Competition within the family for such roles can be a healthy mirror of the competition all family members face or will face in the outside world," he said.

"In this way, adolescents are prepared for life; adults are reminded of their declining powers as well as continuing abilities," Mealy said.

Not all families are capable of negotiating these transfers of power, Mealy cautioned. This is not necessarily the fault of the parents or the teen-agers, but can be the result of pressures like the death of a grandparent who helped the family cope, or trouble for the parents at work.

Professional therapists and counselors should recognize that parents are wasting their time barking out military orders to 17-year-olds, but also that parental authority must be retained.

If a teen-ager attempts to usurp such authority, or if a parent abdicates it, the teen-ager may try to dramatize his or her false sense of independence by marrying early or prematurely abandoning education to find a job.

On the other hand, if therapists urge parents to set firmer guidelines for their teen-agers, the parents may bully or cajol their children into unnatural, immature roles.

Much of the difficulty stemming from the generation gap in modern America is caused by forces that no one in the family can do much to control, Mealy said.

Parents' work outside the home — often in jobs so specialized that their children have little sense of what the parents do — is something that serves to undermine parental authority.

Children are separated from home by school at an early age, just as their parents are away in factories or offices.

Consequently, teen-agers and their parents spend far less time with each other. But even as they are separated physically, teen-agers today are on more of an equal footing with their parents.

Teen-agers may not only have the accoutrements of adulthood — cars, a sex life, a full-grown body — but because of the swift changes in the world and the explosion of knowledge in recent decades, they may know more about anything from politics to auto repair than their less-educated parents, Mealy said.

Teen-agers pass through adolescence with few clear milestones to mark their progression to adulthood — and parents may be the only ones who can supply those markers by encouraging teen-agers to exercise their competence.

By doing so, the parents display the one clear sign of adult competence in a constantly evolving society: the ability to adapt to these changes with flexibility and resourcefulness.

"What the generations share is a crisis of faith, and parental authority is included, . . . (but) if the family is to survive, its formal leadership structure must remain," Mealy said. "Parents must retain their superiority on the basis position lest the family sink into anarchy."

Midge Irvin

It's not easy

By Betty Stevens

Midge Irvin always used to tell her husband, Eames, if she was hit by a truck and had only 15 minutes to live, he should see to it that she had one last cigaret.

Mrs. Irvin smoked between one and two packs each day for 21 years.

But she stopped cold eight years ago and now is a dedicated non-smoker.

By the end of 1976, a national survey showed 33 million Americans — 38% of those who had ever been regular smokers — had given up cigarets.

Mrs. Irwin had thought about quitting for a long time but didn't think she could do it. Pressure to quit became more intense after her husband quit.

It was at a friend's 40th birthday party. Mrs. Irvin had a cold and in spite of a bad cough kept smoking. A friend at the party said, "You could quit, you know." She put out her cigaret and has not had another.

Last year she read a story in The Lincoln Journal about the American Cancer Society's goal to get five million persons to stop smoking within a year's time.

Mrs. Irvin volunteered to become a stop-smoking clinic instructor. She is currently involved as a co-leader in an 8-session clinic meeting at Bryan Memorial Hospital. The classes help smokers come to terms with their habit and reinforce their desire to quit, Mrs. Irvin said.

What Mrs. Irvin likes best about being a non-smoker is that she believes she has extended her life, her house is cleaner, her children do not smoke and she has no more holes in her clothes or furniture.

She said one of the students in the clinic recently said he was trying to quit because he did not like the feeling that he was engaging in something that was completely out of his control.

"That feeling of self-mastery is wonderful," Mrs. Irvin said.

Is it tough to quit smoking?

"Oh my God, yes!" Mrs. Irvin said. "Something important is missing from your life. In the beginning I couldn't think of anything else except that I didn't have a cigaret."

It took her from four to six months to get over that feeling and claims the only way she made it was from assurance from a friend who promised things would get better.

If you quit smoking, is a weight-gain inevitable?

"You are extremely restless. You miss the oral part of it. Those two factors cause you to put a lot of food in your mouth that has nothing to do with hunger."

Mrs. Irvin said she thinks it's best to take on one problem at a time. "Quit smoking first. If you add weight, you can tackle that problem later."

"I'm not out campaigning against cigarets, but there are two kinds of cancers over which we can have a decided control — skin and lung. But many people do not exercise their option over that control," she said.

Roles butts play in lifestyle critical to quitting

(c) New York Times

To optimize your chances for success, your approach to quitting smoking should be tailored to the reasons you smoke. Psychological studies have defined six roles that cigarets can play in people's lives, as follows:

Stimulation: To help you get going and focus on what you are doing. Stimulation smokers tend to smoke heavily in the morning, sometimes having their first cigaret of the day the moment they get up. As a substitute for cigarets, they might try such "stimulants" as a cool shower, brisk walk, deep breathing or an exercise routine.

Handling: To glean the satisfaction of manipulating an object and having something to do with your hands and mouth. Such smokers enjoy the process of taking out a cigaret, lighting up, feeling it in their mouths, watching the smoke and toying with the ashes and butt.

Pleasurable relevation: To add to already good feelings and help you relax. Pleasure-seeking smokers tend to light up after meals or making love or finishing a task. They usually find it easy to quit, sometimes by substituting other pleasurable, but less hazardous, activities.

Crutch, or tension reduction: To relieve bad feelings, such as tension, anxiety, anger, disappointment, fear or depression. Such smokers are more likely to light up when things go wrong or the pressure builds up. They must try to face difficult situations without smoking, a task that often turns out to be much

Feminist faced with NEW role

By Mary Fless
Syracuse, N.Y. (AP) — Karen DeCrow used to be a lot of things.
She used to be an all American girl who tried to act stupid and helpless to attract men. She used to be married and a dutiful housewife — twice. She used to be resorts editor for Golf Digest magazine.
She was editor of 'The Pregnant Teenager' and author of 'The Young Woman's Guide to Liberation' and 'Sexual Justice'. She was an unsuccessful candidate for mayor of Syracuse.
And until a few days ago, she was president of NOW, the National Organization for Women.
But she leaves the women's rights group with declining membership and trying to heal itself of a bitter dissension so serious that NOW founder Betty Friedan once threatened to start a rival organization.
She also leaves at a time when the women's movement has suffered severe setbacks — the defeat of the Equal Rights Amendment in New York, New Jersey and Florida leaving that No. 1 goal of NOW still three states short of enactment and a more distant possibility than ever before.
The housewife turned crusader for women's equality probably has sparked more dissension within the country's largest women's rights organization than any time in its 10 year history.
Internal disputes, fired by Ms. DeCrow's differences with her board members, plagued NOW during her first term and came to a head at the raucous NOW convention in 1975 which she narrowly won reelection.
But in recent months, fighting has subsided and one of Ms. DeCrow's hotly debated policies — more political involvement by NOW, including vigorous campaigns against anti-ERA and anti-abortion candidates — seems to be bearing fruit at least in one or two instances.
Indiana in January became the 35th state to ratify the ERA, thereby breaking a two-year logjam over its adoption. Ms. DeCrow took credit on NOW's behalf.
It's obvious that the strategy of defeating anti-ERA candidates worked in Indiana," she said.
Supporters regard the troubles of Ms. DeCrow's presidency as an inevitable but healthy result of her efforts to broaden the membership.
Her most outspoken critic, Ms. Friedan, says the problem is Ms. DeCrow's "pseudo-radical rhetoric" and her attempts to divert NOW from the interests of the majority of American women — white, middle-class American women.
No matter what's done, it offends some," Ms. DeCrow says with a shrug. "The timid, cautious people are not going to change the world."
At 39, Ms. DeCrow's personality and style are as controversial as her ideological differences with some NOW members. She can be maddeningly flippant, unyielding and independent.
At the Democratic National Convention, for instance, she flatly refused to accept a compromise with Jimmy Carter that promised somewhat less than the 50% representation at future conventions that women convention delegates had pressed for.
If God can ordain equal representation of women and men, can the Democratic party do less?" she demanded.
Ms. DeCrow is adept at getting publicity for each round in her fight against sex discrimination. When she decided to challenge "men-only" policies at bars and restaurants, she chose the 115-year-old male sanctuary of McSorley's Ale House in New York City. Her court suit forced the bar to open its doors to women.

Asked once whether she would marry again, the twice-divorced Ms. DeCrow said she doubted it, mainly because "it just isn't my cup of tea," and because she is convinced "the best sex and friendships occur outside of marriage."
Ms. DeCrow, whose slightly overweight frame betrays her enthusiasm for food, cheerfully acknowledges that the perquisites of travel and prestige were a big attraction of her job.
No job I've ever had is as much fun as being president of NOW. I don't know any man or woman — with the exception of Jimmy Carter — whose life is as interesting as mine," she said one day recently as she relaxed at her home.
My goal," she says, "is the creation of a society where gender makes no difference in the way you lead your life. Most women still end up in traditionally female jobs. We're interested in raising the salaries and security of those stereotype jobs and in attacking the problems of housewives."
She decided not to run for another term of president, which brings up the question, what will the once-president of NOW do now?
I have lots of lovely alternatives," she says. "I'm definitely going to write a book on my trip to China and practice law.
"Maybe I'll run for Congress."

The best of T's for now into summer.

Strong Bidding, Raleigh, N.C.

Answer: West didn't do anything wrong. He opened a light balanced hand and he responded to East's forcing cue bid. East bid very strongly with the redouble and cue bid, but nothing could alter the fact that he had passed originally. I like the bidding through West's three diamonds. In my opinion, instead of an ambiguous three spade bid, East should have jumped to four hearts and therefore gets 98 per cent of my charges.

Dear Mr. Corn:
Is a jump to a game contract always a shutout?

Four Way Stop, Rochester, N.Y.

Answer: Decidedly not. However, a direct jump to game over any opening no trump bid is a definite shutout bid. A jump to game by responder (1♠-4♦) shows a distributional hand with good trumps and not much in high cards. A jump to game by opener (1♣-1♠-4♣) promises about 20 points with good trump support.

To Elisabeth Merrey, life is dance, yoga

Elisabeth Merrey

By Linda Ulrich

She was Betty Grable's other Dolly sister in a night club act, Mitzi Gaynor's dance-in for movies and a yoga student of Swami Vishnudevananda.

Elisabeth Merrey's life is, quite simply, dance and yoga and she has scrapbooks, memories and commitment overflowing.

Her scrapbooks, filled with personally autographed pictures of Hollywood stars, are a map of her professional dance career. Born in Denver, she studied dance there until she moved to Los Angeles to go to school.

Her schooling there lasted only five months and ended after she began dancing professionally in movies and as a featured dancer in the Los Angeles Civic Light Opera and in Las Vegas.

When Betty Grable took her version of the movie "Dolly Sisters" to the stage, Merrey was Betty's sister.

And when choreographers developed dances for Mitzi Gaynor, Merrey learned them and demonstrated them for Miss Gaynor so that the star could decide whether she wanted to do a particular routine in the movies.

The list of famous people she worked with includes Sammy Davis Jr., Harry Belafonte, Dean Martin, Phil Silvers, Al Hirt, Liberace, the Mills Bros., Fred Astaire, Florence Henderson and Gordon MacRae and Johnny Puleo and His Harmonica Gang.

She was in movies like "Carousel" and "No Business Like Show Business" with Marilyn Monroe.

Of dance, she says: "To people who dance, dance is everything."

Of show business, Merrey says: "If you picked a group of Lincoln people off the street and named them famous people, they would be no different from the stars. They're just like ordinary people, and if someone is together emotionally, they are able to handle that (being a star)."

She can no longer dance up a storm because of a hip injury, but she ends that aspect of her dancing career with little regret because she now teaches others to dance.

She is a guest teacher at the Academy of Dance Arts and has her own schools in Nebraska City and Wahoo.

"My love is the ballet," Merrey said, although she also teaches yoga, tap dance and jazz dance, which is "a relaxed version of ballet."

"When parents ask their children, 'Wouldn't it be fun to take dance?' they may be doing them a disservice," she said, "because it's really not fun. It should be approached as learning, like learning to play the piano."

A study showed that ballet dancers possessed top overall physical condition when compared to sports participants, she added.

Merrey thinks 8 to 10 is the ideal age for a child to begin serious study of ballet. With discipline and dedication, some of which must come from the parents, "any child should be quite a good dancer in about four years," if he or she has lessons at least twice a week.

When teaching, she refers to a student's body as something she and the child are working with together. And if a student cannot do something, she tells him or her the body simply is not ready to do that yet.

There are children for whom dance comes too easy, Merrey said, and it actually may be a disadvantage. "Often the kids who really perspire are the ones who are still dancing years later," she said.

Ballet makes children aware of their body, correct posture and helps them "gain the ability to do 10 different things at once."

Ballet, in which you look at yourself in a mirror, means your mind is directed outward. Yoga brings the mind inward, she said.

Merrey has studied yoga 15 years but some people cannot do yoga, she said, because "anxiety to them is quiet."

Somehow their bodies fight it, she said, but "if they would give it three months, I think they would find a tremendous change."

It's time for our Garden Party. And you're the guest of honor.

Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, May 2

Your birthday today: Life is quiet until around midyear when words are translated more easily into actions. Constructive developments, prosperous times are promised. Whatever their quality, relationships are open to public view, either strengthened or lost in the testing that comes now. Today's natives are cheerful, carefree, generous. Many are singers, entertainers, show people. Those born this year have potentially strong intuition, must learn sensible uses of it.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: Most of today is spent coming to the surface, getting organized. Associates have problems, are no help. Observe all safety rules around power equipment.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Temporarily, think matters through before leaping into action. Time estimates are faulty. Don't accept new jobs with deadlines unless they pay well enough.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Anything planted now, whether in your garden or symbolically as a working idea, has great promise. Beware confusion that spurs on repetitious wrangling.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: Your workweek starts rolling after noon; earlier is a practice run. Avoid sudden demands. People need time to digest your message, decide how to answer.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: Haste, distraction break lines of speech and thought, hinder communications. Self-styled authorities require tact. Travel isn't favored, go only if you must.

Virgo [Aug. 23-Sept. 22]: Perspective is blurred, superficial details obscure the picture. Scruples lead you to say more than others can take. Expect swift reactions, harsh opinions.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: Money is the main topic. You've finances to settle, yet little hard information to go on. Group activity sharpens; squabbles are difficult to arbitrate.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: What was theoretical, mostly about other people, comes closer to reality, affects you and your sense of justice. Cail your shot, but don't be heavy-handed.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: Confidential items become general talk. Don't assume because some things are known that all things are. A show-me approach saves hard-earned cash.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: Reserve judgment, provide for contingencies until news opens up with fresh accounts of what's going on. Add nothing to gossip, let it stop with you.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb. 18]: Everybody is engrossed in his dilemma until changes are suggested, then the bickering starts. Others are guided more by your example than your advice.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: Pressures are to move, adopt new methods. Don't drag in the distant past, people having no connection

Lunkhead son-in-law still a lunkhead

Dear Ann Landers: Your usual sharp eye must be getting dimmed by age. You missed a humdinger recently. I was disappointed.

I refer to the letter from the woman who was miffed because her son-in-law was still calling her "Hey, you" after four years. She said, "Wouldn't you think the lunkhead would know better?"

Why didn't you nail her in your typical Landers style and tell her that "Hey, you" is plenty good enough for a mother-in-law who calls him a lunkhead?

Canton Carl

Dear Cant: I got the impres-

Ann Landers

sion that the mother-in-law called him a lunkhead after four years of "Hey, you." In my opinion "Lunkhead" is plenty good enough for a son-in-law like that.

Dear Miss Landers: This is in response to the barrage of letters you received regarding the negativism of students in our schools. Since I have never been in their buildings, I am no judge of what goes on elsewhere, but I can speak for the school of which I am the principal.

The students in our school are not angels, but they are courteous, respectful both of people and property, eager to learn, and a pleasure to be with. I like to feel that the reasons behind those positive characteristics can be traced to the parents, religious affiliations and the teachers. If the adult society shows respect and love toward our students, we find they reciprocate.

I realize there is much information one must have before making a judgment, but I'd be interested in finding out what the letter writers have done to create such problems, and to alleviate them.

I don't envy anyone having to go to work under the conditions described. I wake up each morning, looking forward to another wonderful day.

Alvin N. Cohen, Principal,
Wilmet Junior High School,
Chicago

Dear Mr. Cohen: I received a handful of letters similar to yours, but unfortunately you folks were badly outnumbered.

Hungarian twig doll bestows good luck

By Phyllis Fiarotta
The origin of the twig doll is deeply embedded in many European traditions. This particular doll comes from Hungary and was made by young, motherless girls who gave them away to village children as a token of good luck. A similar doll can be traced to the Czechoslovakian heritage.
This motherly, aproned doll will make an unusual addition to your collection.

1. Choose a small branch with three offshoots extending from one end.
2. Cut back the side offshoots keeping the middle one as tall as you want the head to be.
3. Wrap cotton over the middle offshoot to form a round head, Fig. a.
4. Cut a large circle, twice the size of the head, from a nylon stocking, Fig. b.
5. Wrap the circle over the cotton head. Gather and tie the circle to the twig under the head, Fig. c.
6. Paint on a face with poster or watercolor paints.
7. Create a torso by molding cotton on the twig below the head. Tie it in place with thread, Fig. d.
8. Cut a piece of fabric, large enough to wrap around the torso, for the bodice.
9. Wrap the fabric bodice around the torso and sew it in place at the back, Fig. e.
10. Cut four sleeve shapes the same color fabric as the bodice. Also cut four hand shapes from a skin-colored fabric.
11. Sew a hand to each sleeve shape to form four arm shapes.
12. Place every two arm shapes together, right sides facing, and sew together 1/4 inch in from the edges. Leave the top end unsewn.
13. Turn each inside out to form the arms.
14. Stuff each arm with cotton.
15. Tuck the raw edges of each arm under and blind-stitch closed.
16. Sew each arm to the top of the bodice, opposite each other, Fig. e.
17. Wrap a length of white ribbon or fabric around the back of the neck, crisscrossing on the front of the bodice, and ending at the back, Fig. f.
18. Trim the ends of the ribbon so they just overlap each other. Stitch in place.
19. Cut a long piece of scrap fabric for the skirt. The width should allow part of the bottom of the branch to show.
20. Sew the widths of the fabric together. Turn inside out.
21. Sew a one-fourth-inch hem along the raw edges at the top and bottom.
22. Gather the top with a running stitch, leaving the needle and thread attached.
23. Slip the branch into the gathered end of the skirt. Pull

24. Make a hemmed, gathered apron and sew it to the skirt at the waist.
  25. Make a large, flat bow from fabric or ribbon and sew it to the top of the head.
  26. Sew dark beads around the head under the bow for a curly hair line. Add beads to the back of the head to complete the hair.

Lincolmites vie for 3 City Council seats

Vote for THREE

Tamas Robert (T.R.) Allan, 22, 2800 Woods Blvd. Commercial real estate salesman. Graduate University of Nebraska. Member Lincoln Board of Realtors, Hillcrest Country Club, Racquet Club, First-Plymouth Congregational Church.

Consolidation — For increased efficiency and possible tax money savings, I favor it. Administrative services are being duplicated in many areas. A combined government would not only have considerable economic advantage by operation at a larger scale, but services could be better coordinated to serve both the city and county more effectively, day to day and in emergencies.

Spending — Outside consultation and excessive study plans. Consolidation of the city and county governments would enable decreases in administrative staffs and duplicated services. Participation in federally funded plans can sometimes be costly even though the proportion paid by the city may seem small.

Issues, Problems — Zoning problems. Finalize the comprehensive plan as soon as possible. Out of City Consolidation: Lincoln has all the talent necessary for consultation or business activity that city government might need. City-County Merger: Proceed on the merger of these two governments to increase efficiency and save money. Disposition of land remaining from the Northeast Diagonal: Return the land to the tax rolls and put the money from the disposition back into the street department. A more decisive and responsible City Council. Council members should make decisions, not evade them.

Allan

Bailey

*Sue Bailey, 53, 1800 So. 22nd. Housewife. Graduate University of Miami. Active on many boards related to Council activity. Past member of Youth Service System, League of Women Voters, Lincoln Community Council, Faculty Women's Club, Special Education Advisory Committee. Unitarian Church.

Consolidation — As a taxpayer in both city and county, I wouldn't argue that we'll ever have lower taxes, but I am convinced one of the best ways to control the expansion of costs and personnel is to merge the two governments. As an elected official, I know the frustrations that come from the need for joint decision-making when there is no provision for such voting. I would support only a merged government that retained the provision for home rule and that gave fair, equitable treatment to both the city and farm dweller.

Spending — Because of careful, conservative fiscal controls exercised by the City of Lincoln, I don't anticipate a fiscal disaster such as in New York City. The Council recently has concurred on the mayor's six-year projections for revenue and expenditures. If these are reasonably accurate and if future councils plan carefully and budget within the level of current services, there should be no need to curtail services. Unexpected financial pressure might call for increased productivity of personnel but not for layoffs. I don't believe crying doom is healthy if the goal is a strong, viable economy.

Issues, Problems — After one is on the Council for awhile, problems tend to sort themselves into basic categories. Any Council member in the next four years will confront issues of private need (or sometimes greed), which must be balanced against public benefits. The street-widening issue will be the same whether the voice heard is Fremont Street or 40th Street, Randolph or the Radial. The neighborhoods' strongly voiced demands to be heard in public meetings will sound no different than the voice of the Chamber of Commerce. The Council must defend the liberty of all without endorsing license for any.

Hampton

Robinson

Joseph R. Hampton, 51, 7125 South Hampton Rd. Investor, businessman. Attended Chadron State College. Airport Authority vice chairman. Member Sertoma Club, Lincoln Chamber of Commerce, Elks Club. Former member Sertoma Club board of directors. First Lutheran Church.

Consolidation — We all are for efficiency in government, but the questions really are, "How, at what cost and to whose benefit?" This can never be properly examined unless dealt with in detail, and clearly spelled out as to how it would happen, what services would it provide county-wide, at what cost to the people and if it is really an improvement or simply a restructuring of people and government. After it is clearly spelled out, the people must have the right to vote on the question.

Spending — At this time, to state what spending or services I would curtail would have to be a decision based on philosophy or emotion. Too much of that is happening in city hall now. I would have to be informed of the total budgetary needs and the funds available and weigh these factors carefully and establish priorities that would best serve the total community and then have the backbone to make a sound judgment.

Issues, Problems — My order of priority is a viable economy, a high quality of life in the community and the effective use of government to serve the people, not dominate them. All three can be achieved by returning sound judgment back to city hall.

*John L. Robinson, 33, 3111 Orchard. Attorney. Law degree University of Nebraska. American Trial Lawyers Assn., Nebraska Bar Assn. Quinn Chapel A.M.E.

Consolidation — If we are assured full cooperation by and between participating governmental entities and also brought to realize the "economics of scale" suggested with consolidation, I would lend full support. As the situation presently exists, however, several questions remain. A concern raised frequently by residents in the balance of the county is that under conditions of consolidation it becomes impossible to assess services fairly. I sympathize with their basic concern. I am confident an equitable solution is available, one which would relate taxes to services actually supplied.

Spending — The Council recently has reviewed a proposal to establish fiscal limits for the general revenue portion of the operating and capital budgets. The purpose of this proposal is to address the current fiscal crisis and further to have our budget reflect concern that the city maintain its effort in terms of scope of services provided. As presently projected for the years 1980-83, a reduction in scope of services is proposed. Such is necessary due to possible insufficiency of funds. Current revenue sharing program is due to end in 1980-81.

Issues, Problems — Assess neighborhood needs through attitude surveys as well as on-site inspections. Funds, on a programmed basis, are becoming available through our Urban Development Dept. A division of economic development needs to be created to attract new monies to fund this problem. Regulate zoning and land use, insuring any changes with respect thereto are made compatible with the recently adopted Comprehensive Plan. The need for higher densities in the major urban core should be reviewed in an effort to avoid negative impacts of urban sprawl.

Scherer

Walker

Lee V. Scherer, 43, 620 Broadview Dr. Owner, manager of tavern, businessman. B.S., University of Nebraska. Former administrative assistant to Gov. J.J. Exon and former Lincoln Mayor Sam Schwarzkopf. City's first community development director. Member YMCA, Havelock Businessmen's Assn., Lincoln AAA Softball Assn., Lincoln Sowers Club. Former member Region II Crime Commission. St. John's Catholic Church.

Consolidation — City-county consolidation should be voted on by the people. Prior to the vote, as a councilman, I would insure voters were informed of short- and long-range costs, jobs eliminated, projected savings in tax dollars and historical information from other communities which have experienced similar consolidation. The issue is not as simple as some would like taxpayers to believe. There must be safeguards for both city and county residents. County fire protection must be handled properly.

Spending — As a taxpayer, this is extremely important. As a candidate, it is impossible to isolate spending reductions or service curtailments now because judgments must be made in relation to needs as represented by the mayor's upcoming budget. If I receive these budget specifics, and if reductions are necessary, I would eliminate duplicated functions and resist hiring outside experts. When forced to choose between human development programs and construction frills, I would favor people programs, such as expansion of Madonna Day Service. I have been involved in seven city budgets and know where to look for tax savings, unneeded spending and padding.

Issues, Problems — Fighting inflation by using common sense. Supporting planned neighborhood developments. Providing jobs. Energy conservation by supporting energy-saving programs in private, public sectors. Effective police and fire services by budget support. Attempting to reduce increasing utilities rate increases.

There are others: Downtown development and senior citizens programs, helping business and industry expand, putting city land back on tax rolls and improving bus system. Coping with these issues will take an improved cooperation and leadership.

Questions

for

City Council

*Designates Incumbent

The City Council is a seven-member board elected at-large to four-year terms. Three seats are up for election this year. Legislative powers of the city are vested in the Council, including the power to investigate department operations. The Council also determines annual appropriations and tax levies, has confirmation power over mayoral appointments and may pass, amend or repeal ordinances in connection with provisions of the city charter. Salary is $4,000 annually.

Consolidation — What are your views on consolidation of city and county government?

Spending — If, due to financial pressures, city government was forced to reduce spending or curtail services, what expenditures would you reduce or eliminate?

Issues, Problems — In order of priority, what are the main issues or problems facing Lincoln and how would you deal with them?

8 candidates vie for posts on school board

FULL TERM Vote for THREE

Pearl Goldenstein, 54, 2201 No. 61st Educator B.A. Hastings College, M.E. University of Nebraska. Member University Place Community Organization, League of Women Voters, NOW, American Inter-Professional Institute. Past president Brownell School PTA, former director elementary education for State Education Dept. Recipient NSEA Award for Outstanding Service to Education in Nebraska.

Improvement — Continue present strong basic programs and strengthen music, arts and kinds of knowledge and experiences essential for effective living and citizenship participation, such as energy and environmental education. Develop further multicultural and coequal education programs and minority hiring. Increase efforts to meet needs of children in such areas as special education, education to overcome disadvantages and to cultivate gifts and talents. Continue the program of staff development. Review and revise this program to meet changing needs of teachers, students and curriculum. Provide additional means for parent involvement.

Goldenstein Mortensen

Lynn Mortensen, 30, 1111 Cobblestone Dr. Instructor and supervisor of student teachers at University of Nebraska. B.A., M.E., University of Nebraska. Member National and State Councils for Social Studies, Phi Delta Kappa.

Improvement — I would work to maintain quality we now have, strive for continuing improvement. Provide for special needs of all children, while working within budget. Monitor spending of funds to make sure children are receiving benefits intended. Target areas in "3 R's" where students are weakest, while continuing emphasis on basic skills. Help students learn skills and attitudes necessary to be effective citizens, such as how to get along with others, assume responsibility and make decisions. Gather input from several sources for evaluation of staff and administration. Continue helping teachers improve their skills. Additional community involvement.

Roper Slaikeu

Louis L. Roper, 45, 3530 Cooper. Bank vice president. Graduate University of Nebraska. Member Lions Club, Extra Point Club, Shriners, North Star Lodge 227 AF & AM, Scottish Rite, American Legion, Aksarben. Director State School Board Assn., treasurer Lancaster County March of Dimes, president American Institute of Banking. Westminster Presbyterian Church.

Improvement — Lincoln has an excellent school system. We have a fine superintendent, an excellent staff and the most experienced teachers in the state. Our students consistently are above the state and national norms on almost all tests. We should continue to refine programs and to hire the finest teachers available. Although we are improving our communications with parents, we still need to concentrate on improving this important program. We need to improve coordination of curriculum from elementary schools to feeder junior highs and, in turn, to their appropriate high schools. Upgrading of programs for the gifted and handicapped students need further emphasis.

Steve James Slaikeu, 28, 2753 Stratford Ave. Executive director of League of Human Dignity B.S., University of Nebraska, attended Princeton Seminary, Princeton, N.J. Community Development Task Force, secretary of LOMR advisory committee, Young Life.

Improvement — I am concerned the school board is the victim of insulating barriers which make parents, students and neighborhoods feel the board doesn't understand or hear their thoughts on closings, discipline, busing, districting, transfer policies or overcrowding. As our community grows we need greater diversity on the school board that encourages discussions in the open. We must continue to develop a comprehensive educational system that serves all students equitably. The school system representatives must speak out when city policies conflict with the needs of our schools and children.

Waechter Wall

Jerry Jean Waechter, 33, 1150 Elba. Graduate Northeast High. Member Belmont Community Center, Northwest Lincoln Community Assn., Capital Association for Retarded Citizens advocate, West Lincoln PTA. Former staff assistant for state fire marshal. Christ Lutheran Church.

Improvement — Improve accounting procedures to the board has a more accurate idea of what programs are costing. Allow parents a voice in curriculum decisions before programs are placed in schools. Set up advisory boards at junior high level to improve communications between elementary and secondary schools and parents. Improve curriculum evaluation by gathering information from administrative staff, school-level staff, parents and students. Improve quality by adhering to goal of the schools — not to educate 28,000 students but to educate each student to his potential.

Milan Wall, 31, 1260 So. 22nd. Director of marketing and information, University of Mid-America. Graduate University of Nebraska. Member United Way Planning Division, chairman Lincoln Public Schools Title IV Advisory Committee, Prescott PTA. Former president Theatre Arts for Youth, board member Near South Neighborhood Assn., Lincoln Public Schools written communications advisory committee.

Improvement — Lincoln Public Schools would benefit from improvements in the following areas: better community-school communications through increased parent involvement; more attention to evaluation of school administrator performance and clarification of expectations of teachers; more clearly defined student achievement expectations in basic skills and personal growth; orderly planning and clearly defined rationale for adoption of new programs and evaluation of existing programs; maintenance of building and program quality in older neighborhoods; improved communication with community social and human service agencies and use of their resources, attention to needs of special and gifted students.

SHORT TERM Vote for ONE

Questions

for School Board

*Designates Incumbent

The Board of Education is a six-member board elected at-large to four-year terms. Four seats are up for election this year — three full terms and one two-year term to fill a vacancy left on the board this winter. The board is responsible for setting school expenditures and governing the Lincoln Public Schools and the Lincoln Educational Service Unit. The board is unsalaried.

Improvement — In what specific ways can Lincoln Public Schools improve their quality?

Homebuilders Assn. Former member Toastmasters. Our Saviour's Lutheran Church.

Improvement — It is the Lincoln Board of Education's responsibility to uphold and improve the high standards of our school system by a strong, positive approach to policy making. Three ways we must continue to grow and strive to improve. Maintain a strong, progressive school curriculum with emphasis on basic skills; work with administrators and staff to increase retention and for growth opportunities for teachers and support personnel; watch spending of funds to assure they are used for purpose they were appropriated as part of continued responsibility to taxpayers.

Fannie Thomas, 48, 3410 T St. Social worker for senior citizens. Attended Southern Christian Institute and Jackson State, licensed practical nurse. Member Business and Professional Women's Club, League of Women

Linnertz Thomas

Voters, NAACP, Foster and Adoptive Parent Club. Former member Eastern Star, Mt. Zion Church.

Improvement — Early and continued assessment of students. More scheduled counseling of classes with students and parents. Motivational resources for students to take classes needed rather than "easy" subjects. More stress on multicultural education in schools. A more uniform system of reading and math skills in the schools utilizing volunteers, if necessary. More stress on career educational programs. More parent involvement and support in the school system.

Council

between the Council and city administration and also citizen groups' willingness to act.

Dorothy Walker, 34, 309 West Rio Road. Lincoln-Lancaster Child Guidance Center social worker and program developer. B.A., University of Houston, M.S.W., University of Nebraska. Member Democratic Central Committee, health committee of Lincoln-Lancaster Commission on Status of Women. National Association of Social Workers. Association of Certified Social Workers. Unitarian Church.

Consolidation — I support consolidation with certain conditions. The fundamental issue is not to create another level of bureaucracy but to insure increased representation and participation by the citizens of Lincoln and Lancaster. It is essential such an entity not cost tax dollars far in excess of existing governmental structures. We should demonstrate the practicality of merger by proceeding slowly with attempts to gain experience in cooperation through limited initial mergers of selected functions and offices. A successful consolidation can only come from the participation and involvement of citizens representing all parts of the county.

Spending — Financial resources are limited. The city faces difficult choices. Unwarranted expansion and high cost for services add extra burdens to existing financial pressures. The Council must set services priorities so those that are critical remain funded. Two ways to free money within the budget include consolidation of duplicated services and coordination with private resources toward sharing costs for human services, recreation, libraries. My six years experience in Lincoln's human services is an asset in this area. In addition, we must continue to hold the line on new hiring. Public utilities, Lincoln General, LES must remain self-sustaining.

Issues, Problems — Neighborhood preservation through development of neighborhood advisory council, affirmative action on greenlining, selling city-owned property west of 27th Street, proceeding with green belt areas. Energy conservation through revising electric rate structure, improving mass transit, encouraging alternative energy programs, enforcing insulation ordinance. Retaining downtown as a retail market through revitalization of adjacent neighborhoods, supporting the Performing Arts Center, discouraging unwarranted shopping centers. Providing adequate health delivery services through coordination with private funding for neighborhood satellite facilities. In some areas, neighborhood centers might house additional programs such as child care, recreation, library services.

How Voters Guide was prepared

Representatives from the Lincoln League of Women Voters and The Sunday Journal and Star prepared questionnaires, which were sent to candidates. The material in this supplement was taken directly from the candidates' answers in their own words as space permitted.

All candidates were given a 100-word limit for answers to questions. Replies exceeding the word limit were condensed to meet space requirements.

Where candidates failed to answer questionnaires, attempts were made to contact them by telephone. Where candidates declined to answer specific questions, it is indicated by "No Answer." "No Reply" indicates candidate did not reply to questionnaire. Biographical information on candidates who failed to return questionnaires was taken from the files of The Sunday Journal and Star.

Voters will decide Civic Center bond issue

Civic center bond issue

Ballot language:

Shall the City Council of the City of Lincoln, in the County of Lancaster, State of Nebraska, borrow money and pledge the credit of the City of Lincoln, Neb., upon its general obligation bonds, in the principal amount of not to exceed $7,000,000 for the purpose of renovating, furnishing and otherwise improving those structures located on Block 43, Original Plat, Lincoln, Neb., commonly known as the old Federal Building and Post Office and the Old City Hall for the purpose of providing the City of Lincoln with municipal office space and a performing arts center, said bonds to be issued from time to time as may be determined by the City Council and become due on such dates as may be fixed by the City Council, but in a period not exceeding 20 years from their date; provided, however, any or all of said bonds shall be redeemable with or without premium as provided by law at the option of the city at such time as may be determined by the City Council; and to bear interest at the rate not to exceed the legal rate per annum, if any; and

Shall the City Council of the City of Lincoln, Neb., cause to be levied and collected annually a tax in addition to all other taxes upon all the taxable property in said City of Lincoln, Neb., sufficient in rate and amount to pay the principal of an interest accruing upon said general obligation bonds as the same become due and payable.

☐ For ☐ Against

Explanation

This proposal would authorize the issuance of up to $7 million in tax-supported city bonds to finance a civic center downtown on the block between 9th and 10th Streets from O to P Streets now occupied by Old City Hall and the old Federal Building. The civic center would combine renovation of existing buildings into more city government office space and construct a 2,500-seat performing arts center.

Arguments FOR

A vote FOR this bond issue would preserve the century-old City Hall and the old Federal Building.

Also, supporters say a performing arts center is needed because other facilities in Lincoln can't accommodate the wide range of classical and popular entertainment expected to use such a facility. They point to problems of acoustics and seating capacities in other arts facilities in the city.

Supporters further argue the city office space included in the civic center would be an economic bargain. The city currently uses 40,000 square feet of office space in the old Federal Building. Supporters say that if the bond issue fails, the old Federal Building will be put up for sale, forcing the city to buy, rent or construct needed office space. Supporters say annual utilities and maintenance costs for the civic center office space would be $1.90 a square foot. The construction and renovation itself would cost $3.27 a square foot, they say. The combined cost of the renovated space compares favorably, they say, with the $4 to $8 square foot the city would have to pay to rent space in existing downtown office buildings.

Arguments AGAINST

A vote AGAINST this proposal would reject a bond issue for the civic center.

Opponents of the proposal say there has been no demonstrated need for a new performing arts center in Lincoln. They point to Pershing Auditorium, Kimball Recital Hall at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln and O'Donnell Auditorium at Nebraska Wesleyan University as being able to accommodate a wide range of performances or meetings.

Opponents say further that the estimated 1.8-mill increase in local property taxes to pay off the $7 million bond issue and maintain the new building is too high a price to pay at a time when the crunch of rising taxes is already being felt across the community. With interest costs added in, the final price tag for the civic center would be $12.2 million — not the $7 million face value of the bond issue. A homeowner with a house market-valued at $35,000 would pay an additional $22 a year to retire the civic center bonds and maintain the building if his house is assessed at the constitutionally mandated 35% level for taxing purposes. However, since local real estate is seldom valued at the 35% level, other estimates put the annual cost of the civic center at $10.95 — or 3¢ a day — for each household.

4 seek full and short terms on Airport Authority

FULL TERM Vote for ONE

Priorities — The airport master plan, as adopted by the authority board, provides for the development and growth direction for airport properties. Using experience gained in the past and following sound business management principles now practiced, airport revenues should be brought to a point where tax support can be eliminated eventually. Also, continued contact with the major air carriers to improve scheduling and connections to top markets.

Robert A. Weigel, 39, Calvert Place. Real estate. Law degree from University of Nebraska. Member Downtown Lions Club, East Lincoln Business and Professional Assn., Nebraska Bar Assn., Lincoln Board of Realtors, National Board of Realtors. Westminster Presbyterian Church.

Priorities — I would direct my attention to the 28% vacant improved commercial property at the airport. Properly rented, the land could produce dollars to increase what we can do with the airport and to lessen the burden on the people of Lincoln. Taxes need not increase just because the government has the ability to do that. This country, and specifically our city, needs less governing and correspondingly less spending and, thus, less taxes. Also, Lincoln needs the revenue and services from at least one more major air carrier.

Robert Carl Halvorsen, 44, 4250 Mohawk. Assistant secretary, estimate supervisor for telephone company. Graduate University of Nebraska. Member Volunteer Bureau recruitment committee, secretary-treasurer Eastern Nebraska Officials Assn. (high school sports), Lancaster Lodge 54, member and past president American Field Service. Holy Trinity Episcopal Church.

Priorities — Management of airport properties: A financial reporting of the authority's budget and income and expenses by broad categories, with a yearly report to the public on the authority's activities. Lincoln Air Service: The installation of an X-ray or scanning machine to eliminate physical searches of carry-on luggage and packages. Also, an expansion of facilities and General Aviation area. The old terminal building and immediate area could and should be used for this purpose or an aviation-related business.

*Francis J. Minard, 63, 2426 Sewell. President drug firm. Attended University of Nebraska College of Business. Member Chamber of Commerce aviation committee, Sertoma Club, American Legion, Administrative Management Society, life member UHL Alumni Assn. Past member Lincoln Power Advisory Board, Charter Revision Commission, Governmental Evaluation Committee. First Presbyterian Church.

Priorities — Continue work with carriers to install X-ray scanning equipment. Plan holding area additions to accommodate passenger increase — 183,000 enplaned in 1976, a 14% increase, well above national average. Strive to increase present 90% industrial park occupancy to 100%, while remaining non-competitive with private industrial developments. Increase emphasis on extension of direct service to Topeka and Rapid City due to successful support of Frontier in gaining service to Chicago-O'Hare. Continue efforts for other airline service for Lincoln such as Air Wisconsin's direct service to Minneapolis. Maintain excellence of crash-fire-rescue service serving the airport, the industrial park and Arnold Heights

Zoo action begins today

Lincoln's famous Childrens Zoo and Botanical Gardens at 30th and A opens for another season at 1 p.m. today.

Cited in numerous national publications as a model of its kind, the zoo is dedicating its 1977 season to a former employee. She is Marge Miller, who, since the zoo started 12 years ago, has served as postmistress of the zoo's postoffice. She has retired and is living in Colorado.

After today zoo hours during May are:

Sundays 10 a.m. - 6 p.m., Tuesdays through Saturdays 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Starting June 1, the zoo will be open Tuesdays, Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sundays 10 to 6 and Wednesday's 11 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.

Costs are 35 cents for children under 12 and $1.25 for others. Again there will be train rides around the zoo, costing 50 cents a trip.

Opening festivities today include performances by bands, antics of the Shrine clowns, a dedication ceremony honoring Marge Miller — and lots of new baby animals for public viewing.

Talent is being sought now for the Birdcage Theater, a performance center within the zoo. The sponsoring Community Women's Club has scheduled tryouts at the zoo from 1 to 3 p.m. Saturday. Auditions are for both adults and youth, groups or individuals. Skits, dancing, piano, combos, singing, tumbling, guitars, puppets and tap dancing acts by all ages are welcomed. Acts should run 10 to 20 minutes, said tryout director Susan Stoehr.

Birdcage performances are scheduled to begin June 4 through Labor Day. The schedule calls for shows at 1:30 and 2:30 p.m. on Sundays, Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Harpist Mary Watts plucks up business for Birdcage Theater auditions Saturday as Children's Zoo resident Casper the Friendly Goat wanders by.

The Ferguson Mansion

In 1909-11, $38,000 built opulent home

A house where Lincoln's elite were entertained in splendor at the turn of the century is beginning a new life as a 1910-era museum and a folk arts center.

The house is the Ferguson Mansion at 700

So. 16th, on the southeast corner of the intersection immediately southeast of the Capitol. For a while it was the center of a storm of controversy that clouded the future of the 17-room mansion. No one knew quite what to do with it.

Should it be turned into a museum, designated as the lieutenant governor's residence, used as office space or be leveled into a parking lot?

One of Lincoln's most opulent mansions, it was built by William Henry Ferguson. He, like many others, came to Nebraska in a covered wagon. Unlike most, Ferguson achieved the Great American Dream. The mansion stands testimony to Ferguson's business acumen, timing and luck.

William Ferguson, Ferguson's grandson, describes it as a happy house. He remembers as a young boy transforming the ballroom into a theater or a fort in games with friends. He recalls elaborate parties which sometimes took weeks to plan or sometimes were held on a moment's notice.

Ferguson says his grandfather once phoned his grandmother at 9 a.m. to inform her that he planned to invite a guest for lunch. By lunchtime 25 people were seated around the dining room table. And the meal looked as if it had been planned for weeks.

Many of the guests seated around the maple table may not have known that the table was built especially for that room. Or maybe they didn't know their feet rested on a carpet which had been woven in one piece to fit the living room and dining room area.

But from their position they could peer into the dining room at the matched red oak woodwork and the formed plaster ceiling. Or they could gaze at the crystal chandelier over the grand staircase which monopolized the foyer.

If their eyes wandered upward, they could see the maple beamed ceiling over their heads.

Designed by Searles, Hirsch and Gavin of Cleveland, Ohio, the house was built in 1909-11 at a cost of $38,000. Many products had to be imported, adding to the construction time. Both fireplace mantles in the dining and ballroom and almost every window sill in the house is marble.

When the mantle for the ballroom fireplace was being installed, it came crashing to the floor, according to Ferguson. Workers were fearful its great weight would cause it to plummet through the floor. The house was constructed so solidly, however, that there was not a dent in the hardwood floor.

Silk for the wall covering in the living and dining rooms was imported from China. The crystal chandelier probably was purchased from Tiffany in New York. The master bedroom had handmade French rugs. Bricks were shipped from St. Louis for the 16-inch thick walls of the house.

The Nebraska State Historical Society describes the house as one of Lincoln's most outstanding old mansions. Architecturally the Ferguson Mansion is considered to be one of the best examples of Renaissance Revival architecture in Lincoln and perhaps in the state.

The Renaissance Revival style was moderately popular in the United States during the late 1880's, but few were built west of the Mississippi.

Some features of Renaissance Revival are the grand staircase and an opulent use of highly finished wainscoting and beamed ceilings.

The woodwork has seven coats of rubbed-down varnish which still glistens like new.

In addition to the Renaissance Revival characteristics, there are latent flourishes of an Italianate treatment. The circular

Some new books about show biz

By Bob Thomas, AP
Some new books about show business:

"The Flicks, or Whatever Became of Andy Hardy?" (Ward Ritchie) is the best history so far of the turbulent years that saw the film industry evolve from "Ove Finds Andy Hardy" to "Deep Throat." Charles Champlin, able Los Angeles Times critic, takes an affectionate but incisive view of the creative and business changes.

"The newer flicks do not necessarily reject the fixed and kindly world of Andy Hardy; its wistful innocence touches us all," Champlin concludes. "It is just that there is more to us, and there are other worlds, and the movies are getting around to them."

"Haywire" (Knopf) is an upper-class "Roots" — a search by Brooke Hayward for reasons why her incredibly gifted family ended up in madness and tragedy. She was the daughter of actress Margaret Sullivan and agent-producer Leland Hayward, who managed a total of nine marriages.

It is a beautifully written elegy. At her father's death, Miss Hayward reports, "I wept for my family, all of us, my beautiful, idyllic, lost family... We'd been careless with the best of our many resources: each other."

"Long Live the King" (Putnam) offers another look at the life and career of Clark Gable. Lyn Ternabene has collected an immense amount of information and arrives at her own conclusions:

"Fame and adulation, a notoriously destructive pair, threatened him initially but never did diminish him. In fact, within his lifetime, he grew and expanded and mellowed until he finally blended with the man he projected on the screen."

"The Jack Benny Show" (Arlington House) disproves the theory that no comedian is a hero to his gag writer. Milt Josefsberg, who toiled for Benny as well as Bob Hope, Lucille Ball and others, has penned a closeup view of how the classic Benny broadcasts were put together.

Josefsberg discloses that although Benny rarely said anything disparaging about anybody, he did have reservations about some acquaintances. He admired Groucho Marx's caustic wit, "but Jack had greater sensitivity and winced occasionally when Marx took potshots at certain sacred cows."

"Ginger, Loretta and Irene Who?" (Putnam) by George Eells is an entertaining analysis of the careers of six screen actresses of the early 1930s. All survived except Irene Bentley, who seemed to have disappeared without a trace. Eells has since discovered that she died in Florida in 1955.

"Going Nuts in Brazil With Jack Douglas" (Putnam) continues the wackiness of the talk-show star and author of "My Brother Was an Only Child" and "Never Trust a Naked Bus Driver." This time he's involved in a population control scheme in Brazil. Sheer madness.

"Great Times, Good Times" (Doubleday) by James Kotsilibas-Davis is an extraordinary work of research on the life and travels of Maurice Barrymore, father of Ethel, Lionel and John.

"Who's Who in Hollywood — 1900-1976" (Arlington House) by David Ragan is a welcome addition to film references: chatty, informative and, except for ages, thorough.

Films this week at the Sheldon

"Kinetics" will be shown at 3 this afternoon in the Sheldon Film Theater as part of the Films on the Arts series. Also part of this public showing are the short films "Link—Derek Boshier," "Atmosfields — Graham Stevens," "Cast — Peter Dockley," and "Vertical — David Hall."

Members of the Nebraska Union Foreign Film Society may see the French film "Wedding in Blood" by Claude Chabrol, at 7 and 9 p.m. today through Tuesday.

Public showings of "The Spirit of the Beehive" will be at 7 and 9 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday.

'Kennedy's Children' at Omaha

Omaha — The Omaha Community Playhouse Studio Theater's production of "Kennedy's Children" runs Thursday through next Sunday and May 12-15. All performances are at 8 p.m.

The drama focuses on the turbulent 1960's through five characters who enter the decade with hope and noble aspirations but see dreams crumble as causes are commercialized. It is recommended for mature audiences.

'Me Nobody Knows' on stage again

The Lincoln Community Playhouse is providing two more opportunities to see the award-winning production "The Me Nobody Knows" May 8 and 12 at 8 p.m. at the Playhouse, 2500 So. 56th. Both performances are benefits toward the cost of sending the cast to a national competition in Spokane, Wash., in June.

This production has earned the Lincoln group both state and regional awards in the American Community Theater Assn. (ACTA) competition and the capital city performers will represent the city, state and region in the national competition at Spokane.

In addition to the performances at the Playhouse and possibly in Omaha, the cast and orchestra have recorded a stereo LP album of the festival production and made it available to the public.

Reservations are recommended and after the presentation of the festival production, a reception will be held with the cast and crew.

The ACTA competition started almost by accident in 1965 when a Midland, Tex., theater group traveled to Monaco as the United States' first international representative

After the initial experience, ACTA president Art Cole of Midland, Tex., arranged to have three adjudicators travel the country and select the best production to represent the country on the international level. Today, the competition is based on festivals at the state, regional and national level with the national winner traveling to Monaco's international festival.

The Lincoln Community Playhouse received one vote to represent the U.S. in 1969. In 1971, the playhouse won both state and regional honors and traveled to the national competition. In 1973, the playhouse hosted the national festival in Lincoln. After electing not to enter in 1975, the playhouse entered the competition in 1977 and won the state festival in Broken Bow in March, and the regional festival in Rochester, Minn. in April and will travel to Spokane, June 24-26.

"The Me Nobody Knows" has a traveling troupe of 30 people, including cast, crew and orchestra, making this year's festival participation the largest Lincoln has ever sent.

The effects that competition such as this has on the Lincoln community is multi-fold according to playhouse administrative assistant Carol McVey. The performances at the playhouse inspired Father Henry Burton of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church to write a sermon based upon "The Me Nobody Knows." Lincoln Presscian Paul Burer has written a song incorporating the title of the show into his work.

'Rover Flies Over' tryouts this week

Characters from outer space will invade the Lincoln Children's Zoo beginning June 21 when "Rover Flies Over" begins its summer run. Tryouts for the cast of this outdoor theater production for children are set for this week, according to director David Meisenholder.

Auditions for a cast of nine adults or actors in their late teens will be from 7 to 8 p.m. Friday and 1 to 2 p.m. Saturday at KOLN-TV studios, 40th and W.

Meisenholder is looking for performers who can act, dance and sing and rehearse for five weeks. The theater company will present 10 performances at the Children's Zoo, four shows at the Stuhr Museum of the Prairie Pioneer in Grand Island, two performances for "Arts in the Park" in Kearney and two shows in Chautauqua Park in Beatrice.

While on tour in Grand Island, "Rover Flies Over" will be videotaped by KOLN-KGIN-TV for airing in the fall or winter, said Meisenholder.

"Rover" is by June Baubour who also wrote "Hob's Choice" and "The Battle of Fangleless McRattle." This production is co-sponsored by State Federal Savings and Loan Assn. and KOLN/KGIN-TV.

Meisenholder said the 1977 edition of "Rover" will be the most elaborate of any productions he has presented at the zoo in the past five years. Audiences totalling nearly 24,000 have viewed these productions.

The Mule Barn in 10th season

Tarkio, Mo. — The Mule Barn Theatre here is celebrating its 10th anniversary this summer.

John Dubinski, chairman of the division of language and literature at Tarkio College, is the new managing director. Gregory S. Hurst, chairman of Tarkio College's theatre department, returns as assistant director and will direct productions of "South Pacific" and "Guys and Dolls." Michael Griffith steps up to musical director; he was the assistant last year.

Mike Miller is joining the staff as vocal music director, will perform in the season's four musical productions and will direct Monday night cabaret performances.

The Mule Barn has become an Actors Equity company, receiving grants from the Missouri Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Des Moines downtown movies end

Des Moines (UPI) — Chorus line dolls hustle down the crowded corridor toward the stage and a comedian — perhaps Will Rogers or Ed Wynn — awaits his cue to walk on stage. In the audience at the ornate Galaxy Theater, a stop on the RKO vaudeville circuit, are a thousand or so applauding Iowans.

That was years ago. Now the comeds and chorus girls are gone. The Galaxy, recently a grade-B movie house, is 64 years old and won't see 65.

The Dubinsky Brothers theater chain of Lincoln, Neb., has decided the brick barn is not worth refurbishing. The last downtown other than triple-X houses will be razed. Galaxy management said people don't come to downtown Des Moines anymore for movies.

Third Albert makes grade in Hollywood

By Frances Taylor
(c) 1977, Newhouse Service

New York — Growing up in a Hollywood film family has been a happy experience for young Edward Albert, son of Eddie Albert and actress Margo. Now a firmly established actor, young Edward is cheerful, modest, serious about his work, and in love with movies. His latest picture is "The Domino Principle."

"I hated school," Edward told me when we met here. "I played my first part in 'The Fool Killer' when I was 11 years old," Edward said. "I knew then that I wanted to act but I also knew somehow that I wasn't ready for a career at that age."

"I went back to school and my parents said nothing. They didn't try to influence me either way. They were great and supported me in my decision."

So young Edward, who all his life soaked up knowledge of acting and its skills, went on to college because he could find experts in any subject that interested him. When he was offered the lead in "Butterflies Are Free," he wondered if he could measure up.

He more than made the grade, he achieved stardom in "Butterflies" and went on to co-star in "Forty Carats" opposite Liv Ullmann.

Then he took a year off to explore another of his major interests — music. He is a performer and a composer.

He found he didn't enjoy music as a career, and that another interest, photography, was more fun as an avocation. But acting was always stimulating and enjoyable.

Now 26, Edward Albert loves almost everything about making movies, and acting is his career. After making "The Domino Principle," in which he plays the heavy — a chilling character whose appealing surface conceals real evil — he spent months on location in Ireland during the shooting of "The Purple Taxi," scheduled for release in the autumn.

He's looking forward to "The Bandit Kings," a film that will feature three sets of second-generation movie kids. In addition to Edward, there'll be the Bridges sons and the Carridines. James Keach, brother of Stacey Keach, has written the drama about the time of the James Brothers and other family outlaw groups. Edward will play a heavy again, the Pinkerton man who trails the bandit brothers.

"My parents have been the most important influence in my life," says Edward. "Not only did I have 25 years of learning from them but I always had their support in my decisions. My on-the-job training has enabled me to keep growing, extending my abilities."

'Blondie' fills gap in New York music

By Bruce Meyer, UPI

Nearly every big city in the country can lay claim to having advanced the art and commerce of rock 'N' roll — all, that is, except one.

New York City has the worst track record in the country. The only New York band currently on the list is Kiss.

But now there's Blondie — and there may be hope for the Big Apple after all.

Blondie presents the world with a novel combination: 1970s electric firepower, 1950s teen viewpoint, and a welcome dose of pure 1950s Hollywood sex-kitten glamour.

Standing at the focal point of all this and playing title role — in mini-dress and thigh-high boots and bleached blonde hair — is Deborah Harry, singer and sometime Marilyn Monroe look-a-like.

A Miami native, Debbie has been knocking around New York for at least 10 years, occasionally finding a band in need of a vocalist, more often just staying alive with whatever work was available.

Another down-and-out musician, Chris Stein, wandered into a storefront dive and saw Playing the title-role in Blondie is singer Deborah Harry.

Debbie singing with a loser group called The Stilletoes.

Stein and Harry soon joined forces in both the personal and business level, moving in together and forming Blondie with musicians gleaned from the growing punk-rock scene.

Blondie's stylish blend of teen age passion, hard-edged guitars and simple, early-60s arrangements was something fresh — and Debbie gave the band a visual appeal few competitors could hope to match.

Their first album, "Blondie," is a good introduction to the band's music, though the rather subdued instrumentals and clean mix fail to convey the frantic pace of their stage show. The opening track, "X Offender," is an instant rock classic. The LP is one of the best-ever debuts by a New York Band.

by Moore, "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Così fan Tutte" by Mozart and "Barber of Seville" by Rossini.

Roger Stephens, assistant professor of vocal music, will do the staging, assisted by Pat Moran, a graduate student from Lincoln. Prof. Richard Grace will provide the music with accompanists Linda Laessle, Mary Funcke, both NU staff members, and Mary Steffen, a senior from Humboldt.

University students will participate in the opera scenes.

Vancouver finds a hall

By Irving Lowens

(c) 1977 Washington Star

Vancouver, British Columbia — This handsome, prosperous city has taken a giant step forward musically with opening of the Orpheum Theater, completely refurbished and rebuilt. It is the largest concert hall in Canada.

It is also the new home of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra, which never before since its formation in 1919 has been housed in an auditorium where its talents can be properly displayed.

For the current season, the VSO boasts a subscribership of over 30,000, the largest in North America, and an increase of nearly 700% in eight years. Yet ever since 1959, when the acoustically unsatisfactory Queen Elizabeth Theater was opened, the orchestra had been forced to play most of its concerts there. The rapidly growing audience for good music here forced the VSO to find a more satisfactory home.

In 1972, it was learned that the 50-year-old 3,000-seat Orpheum Theater, largest on the Pacific Coast, was to be transformed into a collection of mini-theaters. When this became known, Simon Streatfeild, then the VSO acting music director, conducted tests which indicated that the theater, were it to be reconstructed, might well solve many of the orchestra's acoustical problems.

An intensive campaign to "save the Orpheum" was launched in 1973 by the VSO, the Community Arts Council and other interested citizens.

No less than $7.1 million was quickly raised with $3.9 million going to the owner of the theater, Famous Players Theaters Ltd., as the purchase price and $3.2 million being earmarked for renovation.

Reconstruction of the Orpheum began in November of 1975. The major structural changes were installation of a new, permanent soundshell made from three-inch thick, steel-reinforced plaster, enlargements of the stage to accommodate a full sized symphony orchestra and chorus and the complete redesign of the proscenium arch, with ornate columns and plasterwork incorporated into the shell.

The final results were unveiled to the general public with a gala concert by the Vancouver Symphony under the direction of its regular conductor, Kazuyoshi Akiyama, with famed contralto Maureen Forrester as guest artist.

The basic transformation of this movie palace into a concert hall turned out to be quite successful from the crucially important acoustical viewpoint. Music sounds warm, undistorted and natural. One of the most unusual features of the hall is the clarity of the sound in the orchestra under the overhang.

Oratorio 'Carmina Burana' next Sunday at Kimball Hall

"Carmina Burana," by contemporary German composer Karl Orff and featuring the University Symphony Orchestra, the University Oratorio Choir and soloists, will be the spring oratorio presented by the School of Music at the University of Nebraska.

The free public performance will be at 8 p.m. next Sunday in Kimball Hall, 11th and R. Prof. Robert Emule will conduct.

The soloists:

Baritone John Brandstetter, a University graduate, now a member of the Minnesota Opera Company and voice instructor at the University of Minnesota. He has won numerous awards and was a finalist in Metropolitan Opera auditions this year.

Soprano Donna Harler is in her first year as an assistant professor of voice at NU. She has made numerous solo appearances in New England and the Middle Atlantic states. She holds a master's degree from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and is a candidate for a D.M.A. degree.

Tenor Malley Keelan is a senior voice major studying toward a bachelor of music education degree at NU. He was recently the tenor soloist in "Messiah".

The manuscript collection from which the texts of "Carmina Burana" (Song of Beuren) were taken date from the 13th century. It was discovered in a monastery near Orff's native Munich. Written in medieval Latin and German by wandering scholars and poets, it contains about 200 sacred and secular poems ranging from earthy simplicity to sophisticated symbolism. From these verses, Orff chose and arranged the text for his work, which he designated a "scenic cantata."

New music concert Monday

The Lincoln Improvisation Ensemble, under the direction of Randall Snyder, will present a concert of new music at 8 p.m. Monday in Kimball Hall.

In addition to compositions by NU students, this concert will feature two premieres of multi-media works, an original play, "The Grand Admiral," by Robert Beadell Jr. and "You've Got a Lot of Nerve," a biofeedback piece by Mike Bergstraesser.

According to Beadell, "The Grand Admiral" seeks to juxtapose the myth of Christopher Columbus with historical fact, that the true Columbus was a greedy, religious fanatic and his exploits in the New World those of a pirate. This play is directed by Jay Perry. Actors are Mitch Tebo, Suzie Wurtz and Scott Hobbs. The improvisation ensemble will act as a class which is presented both the myth and the true Columbus.

Biofeedback uses biofeedback instruments to induce powerful, predictable and repeatable physiological, psychological states by presentation of program stimuli in a definite time-rhythmic sequence, Bergstraesser said.

The piece presents five different life situations, ranging from the meditative to the sexual, by way of a program tape and slides. The performer's response to these situations will be monitored through various combinations of four different biofeedback instruments attached to a studio Moog Synthesizer. This piece will feature Snyder as solo human being. Marty Kline, associate professor of psychology at Wesleyan University, will supply and operate the biofeedback instruments.

"You've Got a Lot of Nerve" is the first known piece of this genre to be performed in Nebraska, Snyder said.

NU wind ensemble plays today

The Symphonic Wind Ensemble of the University of Nebraska will present a free public concert at 4 p.m. today in Kimball Recital Hall.

First on the program will be "Serenade in E-flat Major, Opus 7" by Richard Strauss, scored for two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, four horns, two bassoons and contra bass clarinet.

"Twilight," an oboe solo with band accompaniment, will feature Stephanie Mandyk as soloist.

A new symphony for band by Donald McGinnis, director of bands at Ohio State University, will be one of the highlights of the program. NY bands director Jack Snider, who conducts the ensemble, rates the symphony as an excellent addition to band literature.

The finale will be "Armenian Dances" by Alfred Reed. This work is based on authentic Armenian folk dances from the collected works of Gomidas Vartabed, founder of Armenian classical music.

NU-East concert at 3 p.m.

University of Nebraska East Campus Union will present a choral concert at 3 this afternoon in the East Campus Student Union. Adelaide Ports Spurgin directs this free public program.

Mary Ann Nelson, Cynthia Voigt and Joan Redfern are the accompanists; Cathleen Carter and Barbara Criswell are librarians.

The Choraliers and Choristers will perform alone and combined for the program. Monty Criswell and Joyce Becwar will have guitar solos on a New England folk song entitled "Strawberry Lane." "Shimmering Flutes" will feature instrumental solos by Eileen Graff, Lori Hula and Lila Tooker. A trombone choir will perform.

Doane singers going outdoors

Crete — The Doane College Chamber Singers will get out of the chamber and onto the Doane Lake for a concert. The 16-member group, directed by Gary McKercher, will perform Barber's "To Be Sung on Water" at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday. Other selections on the program will be choral works by Britten, Jannequin and Morley. The event is free to the public.

Monday concert

Hastings — The 20-member Hastings College Chamber Choir, directed by Ken Johnson, gives a public concert at 8 p.m. Monday in the college's Perkins Auditorium.

Youth Symphony's Concert Thursday

The Lincoln Youth Symphony's senior solo concert will be presented at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the auditorium of Northeast High School 63rd and Baldwin. The concert is free to the public and a reception honoring all seniors in the orchestra will follow in the school cafeteria.

June Moore, is the string specialist directing the concert's preparation, Orville Voss is the wind specialist. Joe Neal is the orchestra manager.

The orchestra's concert will be dedicated to the memory of late Eugene Stoll, Lincoln Public Schools instrumental music consultant who directed Youth Symphony development and who customarily conducted the annual spring concerts of the select group. Mr. Stoll was fatally injured in an auto accident near Grand Island about 10 days ago.

The senior soloists and their pieces: Anne Lockhard will play Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 1 in C Major," Karl Scholz will play Mozart's "Bassoon Concerto" and Kathleen Dinsmore will play Howard Hanson's "Serenade for Flute, Harp and String Orchestra." Ellen Ritscher will be the harpist for the latter selection.

Thursday's program will also include the first movement of Dvorak's "Symphony No. 8" and Tchaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

The Youth Symphony played in Kansas City in March, in Fairbury with the Heiken Puppets in April and rehearsed this week with Aaron Copland directing his own music as sung by the four combined public high school choirs.

Crouch, Disciples in gospel program

Grammy winning Andrae Crouch and the Disciples will be at O'Donnell Auditorium, 50th and Huntington, at 8 p.m. Monday for a public concert sponsored by KBHL-FM.

The coveted Grammy was for best soul gospel performance of the year for the album "Take Me Back." Crouch and the Disciples have been on the music charts for six years and have eight albums.

Their contemporary gospel performance, which has jazz, rock, and soul flavor, is dotted with serene hymn-like ballads but also will command the hand clapping and finger snapping common to Crouch concerts.

Crouch has long been disturbed by criticism of those who have preconceived notions about how a performer of gospel music should look and dress. "That kind of judgment creates a barrier, which prevents our message and music from getting through," he said.

Crouch feels that, just as the instrumentor mode of music does not determine the meaning for the listener, so dress or color discrimination should not prevent a person from opening up to a performer and receiving the message.

Wesleyan's band plays at 4 today

The Nebraska Wesleyan University concert band, directed by Larry Rawlins, will present a free public program at 4 p.m. today in O'Donnell Auditorium, 51st and Baldwin. The program includes a piece by John Paulson entitled "Epinicion," an avant garde composition that is mainly left to creative improvisation.

Jazz Society

The Lincoln Jazz Society will meet at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the Greenwich Cafe, 1917 O, to formulate a summer program and talk about next year's series.

Mansion

medallions on the exterior north wall and the tile roof.

Also of historic significance is the fact that it was probably the first iron and concrete residential structure in Lincoln.

The sleeping porches on the east and south sides of the second level appear to have been added after the house was originally constructed, according to the Historical Society.

To the rear and south of the house is a 22 by 40 foot structure that was used as a carriage house and caretaker's living quarters.

The house, which is 2½ stories high, has 17 rooms and 4½ baths.

A finished attic, a large ballroom and the servants' quarters occupy the third level.

The family bedrooms occupy the second floor. The master bedroom has two closets — his and hers — and once had three handmade rugs.

Ferguson said his grandmother once ordered three rugs from France for the master bedroom. She kept only one, sent the others back "and kicked herself for it afterwards."

Also on the second floor is the library and a sitting room area at the top of the grand staircase which is dominated by an imposing five-foot marble fireplace.

There is a stained glass window above the fireplace which used to be between two plaster statues built into the wall.

The main floor is dominated by a grand staircase which extends from the sitting area on the second level to the first floor foyer.

The main level contains the living room, dining room, den, kitchen and the adjoining pantry.

Every room in the house displays a different wood: red oak in the living room, maple in the dining room, walnut in the library and birch in the kitchen.

The entire house contains special features reminiscent of houses for the well-to-do at the turn of the century. Among them:

- A freezer-refrigerator built into one entire kitchen wall. On the porch outside the kitchen a small door opened directly into the freezer so the ice man could unload his wares into it without actually entering the kitchen.

- A central vacuum unit which had outlets in every room. This made dragging around a vacuum cleaner unnecessary.

- A circular shower with thousands of tiny holes, emitting needlelike jets of water.

- A call box mounted on the kitchen wall.

When any of the five entrances' doorbell was punched, a tag showing which doorbell popped up. The servants could glance over and answer the correct door without dashing around, searching for the right entrance.

- A flour bin with a sifter attached right on the bottom.

- A second story janitor's closet with a fire hose still hung neatly coiled and ready for disasters.

The mansion and property were acquired by the state from 94-year-old Myrtle Ferguson in 1962 for $113,970 through a process of implied eminent domain. Eminent domain is the right of a government to take, or to authorize the taking of, private property for public use.

However, Mrs. Ferguson paid $300 a month rent to the state until her death in 1971 at 104.

Ferguson said that during the long process of moving out the furniture, thieves broke in. They stole pieces of the master bedroom set and brass electric fixtures from the dining room. The two statues above the second level fireplace were also stolen.

The crystal chandelier fell victim to burglars. The silk wallpaper with velour backing has been slashed by vandals in several places.

But the real damage has been caused by a leaking roof which is being repaired now so that rain cannot further damage the framework and interior walls.

The Ferguson Mansion belongs to the Nebraska State Historical Society and through matching state and federal funds it is being restored.

Marvin Kivett, director of the Historical Society, said there is a budget request for $65,000 before the Legislature and if this is approved, most of the exterior restoration work can be finished this summer.

He said work could then start on the interior this winter, with full restoration expected by the spring of 1979.

Kivett said the Ferguson Mansion will be a furnished period house. "The Ferguson family has the original furniture and we will have to rely on donations. We are also short some lighting fixtures including chandeliers," he said.

"Case displays probably will be in the basement and/or in the carriage house," Kivett continued.

In addition, the mansion will serve as a state folk arts center to be established by the Lincoln Junior League. Certain rooms can be set aside for crafts like quilt making, doll making, demonstrating lost arts, selling professionally made crafts as well as working with senior citizens.

Kivett stressed the restoration is a statewide project, not just one for Lincoln. He also pointed out that the restored Kennard House is next door.

Through the efforts of the State Historical Society, the Ferguson Mansion was placed on the National Register in December 1972. Being on the National Register makes the property eligible for 50% reimbursement of restoration costs under the Historic Preservation Act of 1966 and adopted by the State of Nebraska in 1967.

Stairway, photographed in 1955, conveys an idea of the house's elegance.

Scout show at Sport Center

Sporting a new name, Scouting, U.S.A. will be highlighted at the Cornhusker Council's annual Scout Exposition Saturday from 2 to 7 p.m.

In addition to the name change — it formerly was Boy Scouts — the exposition moves from its previous home at Pershing Auditorium to the new University of Nebraska Sports Complex, according to exposition general chairman Bill Waldo.

More than 100 display booths at "Scouting Showcase 77" will depict the varied activities of cubs, scouts and explorers from the 15½ counties comprising Cornhusker Council.

Among the booths will be demonstrations on fingerprinting, ham radio, knot-tying, carpentry and camping. The cub-sponsored Pinewood derby will also take place during the show.

There will also be competition among scout groups, an obstacle course and a mini-theater focusing on high adventure activities in scouting.

Any profits from the exposition, whose first purpose is to acquaint the public with the various phases and activities offered by scouting, are used to improve individual units' and the outdoor programs and the council's summer camp.

Hostels for young in heart

If you expect room service with breakfast in bed every morning, hosteling probably isn't for you.

But for 3 million International Youth Hostel Federation members around the world, it is an inexpensive ticket to adventure in 40 countries.

There are currently about 200 hostels (simple, overnight accommodations) in the U.S., including two in Nebraska.

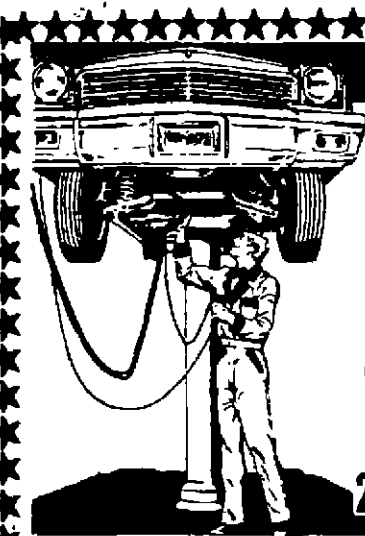

Free says it's difficult to gauge how many Nebraskans belong to the Hostel group, although he says numerous students at the University are members. Some localities use the hostel arrangement to travel to Colorado, he noted, and NU students on foreign study often join before going overseas.

In Europe, where hostels are popular and widespread, social organizations have developed around hostel-related recreational and educational travel, Free said.

Despite its name, the word youth in American Youth Hostels refers to being young in heart and spirit — not in years, AYH members range from 6 to 76, sponsors say.

Rus Free, of the Nebraska youth hostel chapter, reports that about 150 persons travelling through Nebraska make use of local low-cost housing on their trips. In Lincoln, hostellers are usually housed at either Commoplace, 333 No. 14th, or at the YMCA, Free says.

They arise early to come to Lincoln

It might be called a mutual admiration society.

The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra members and citizens of Lincoln have high regard for each other.

Prior to coming to Lincoln for three performances April 22-24, the orchestra had been on tour, playing in Maryville and Moberly, Mo., and Grand Island.

(This is just one of the orchestra's annual tours. Another is a sweep through Kansas and Oklahoma.)

James Cain, general manager of the orchestra, said that because of the short distance between Grand Island and Lincoln, the musicians could have slept late on April 22 but not one did.

"They all were up and ready to come to Lincoln very early," he said. "We all love to come to Lincoln because of the wonderful way we are treated here."

And certainly, Lincolniters have taken the musicians and the music they make to heart.

Writers will meet at Chadron

The Nebraska Writers Guild will hold its annual spring meeting at Chadron on May 14. The Mari Sandoz Heritage Society, based at Chadron State College, will serve as host.

Robert Lute II, president of the guild, said there will be an evening reception at Ft. Robinson on May 13. A lamplight tour of the fort will be conducted by Vance Nelson, curator of Ft. Robinson Museum.

Guild members will gather at Chadron State College on May 14 for a business meeting and to hear speakers on the theme "Our Western Heritage."

Keynote speaker will be Merrill Mattes, whose topic is "Inspiration, Perspiration, Publication; or the Great Platte River Road Revisited." Mattes, who now freelances and works as a consultant, retired in 1975 after 40 years with the National Park Service as historian and manager of research and preservation programs.

Duane Muchmore, editor of Wyoming Wildlife, will speak on magazine writing, particularly for conservation, outdoor and wildlife publications.

Dr. Myron Sutton, visiting professor in parks and recreation at the University of Wyoming and assistant director of the National Park Service international office, will speak on worldwide aspects of heritage preservation.

Caroline Sandoz Pifer, sister of the late Mari Sandoz, will tell how the famous Nebraska author's Sandoz Country heritage influenced her writing. Mrs. Pifer lives south of Gordon in the Sandhills, which figured so prominently in many of Miss Sandoz' works.

An extra feature of the meeting will be an exhibit of western Nebraska photographs by David Tipton. They are the product of a bicentennial grant to Tipton through the Mari Sandoz Heritage Society.

A postmeeting tour of the Black Hills, to be conducted by Ned Wick, instructor of creative writing and director of the travel industry program at Black Hills State College, will be available to guild members.

Nonmembers may attend the May 14 meeting, but admission will be charged. Interested persons should contact Carla Chlouber, Mari Sandoz Heritage Society, Chadron State College.

Battered kids

By Mary Sommerville
Chief, Young People's Services
Lincoln City Libraries

According to Joan Walsh Anglund, childhood is a time of innocence. In her rainbow world, dot-eyed waifs tiptoe through the tulips and enjoy lives of mindless bliss.

That's the way most of us adults remember our childhood: idealized and problem-free. We also tend to think that growing up is easy for everyone, forgetting that some young people are abandoned and abused, without hope or innocence.

Until recently, such children received only cursory treatment in juvenile literature. Outside traditional fairy tales, harsh realities were swept under the rug. Now a number of new books, particularly those about foster children, probe the nightmare realms of young people in trouble.

In most stories, the foster home is a safe haven for kids battered physically and psychologically. Newbery winner Betsy Byars describes the recovery of three such children in The Pinballs (Harper & Row).

Harvey's alcoholic father ran over his legs; Charlie's stepfather beat her; Thomas J. lived with two 88-year-old women who made him a hired hand. Like pinballs tossed hither and thither, these children have been at the mer-her brother Henry, 6, who is brutally beaten by his foster mother. Before coming to grips with that situation, Myra has retreated into a make-believe world ruled by Joan of Arc. In helping her brother escape — thereby saving his life — Myra resembles the heroine she idolizes.

Foster Child (Seabury) by Marion Dane Bauer shows that adults can be both nurturant and abusive.

The love of Renny's hospitalized grandma seemed suffocating, but it seems less so in light of Renny's hypocritical, Bible-quoting foster father, who makes inappropriate advances. Renny runs away to freedom and the book ends on a note of hope, but it remains a chilling reminder of the need for children's rights.

10 plays that won accolades

The Tony Winners.
Preface and introductory note by Stanley Richards; Doubleday.

In this volume, playwright Stanley Richards prefaces a collection of 10 exceptional plays that received the coveted Tony Award for "most distinguished play."

Although the Tony winners will find scant attention in non-theatrical circles, it is a must for the research libraries of drama critics, budding playwrights, students and dyed-in-the-wool theater lovers.

Included are Mister Roberts, The Rose Tattoo, The Fourposter, Tea House of the August Moon, The Diary of Anne Frank, Luther, The Subject Was Roses, Borstal Boy, Sticks and Bones, and The River Niger.

cy of a capricious adult world. By pulling together and by accepting the love of two sensitive surrogate parents, young outcasts become survivors.

Likewise, the title character in Mad Martin (Harper & Row) by Patricia Windsor blossoms in his British foster home.

Previously odd and withdrawn, Martin has led a barren existence of abuse by bullies and neglect by his grandfather, a melancholy and incommunicative man. Relocation to a normal family environment brings Martin out of his shell. Again, it's the friendly children as much as the substitute parents who help speed the healing process.

Come to the Edge (Pantheon) by Julia Cunningham is part fantasy, part realistic fiction.

Ten-year-old Gravel Winter flees a foster home that recalls Dickens' grim orphanages. Upon escaping, the boy becomes a drifter, living with older people and remedying their loneliness. In curing, Gravel himself is cured. From alienation to commitment, the boy comes full circle.

Not so fortunate are the children in the following two titles, which describe foster care at its worst. It is to be hoped that things have changed since the 1940s, the time frame for Marilyn Sachs' December Tale (Doubleday).

Five credit cards used here, abroad

(c) 1977, Newhouse Service
More people are "charging" into their vacations this year than ever before.

Although there are literally thousands of charge cards in use in this country, there are only five that are valid both at home and abroad for general use.

The "Big five" fall into two categories. One consists of two major bank cards, Visa (or BankAmericard) and Mastercharge known as Eurocard in Italy and Spain and as Access in Great Britain. They are called bank cards because they are issued by banks and other financial institutions.

cards, consists of American Express, Diner's Club and Carte Blanche. Until recently, the travel cards have had the overseas travel market to themselves, but in the past five years, the bank cards have made tremendous inroads.

Worldwide, American Express and Diner's Club are accepted by approximately 350,000 outlets and Carte Blanche by about 250,000. Visa and Mastercharge are both honored by some 2 million outlets worldwide, the bulk of them in the United States.

In general, using a bank card costs nothing if the cardholder pays in full within 25 days of billing. After that the banks charge interest. The interest on bank cards runs 18 per cent annually for the first $500 and drops to about 12 per cent for more than $500.

The three travel cards all charge an annual $20 membership fee. Cardholders have to settle accounts within 30 days after they are billed by the card company. After that they are charged at a monthly rate of 1 per cent interest on the unpaid balance. All three also have plans for extra cards. Diner's charges $7.50 for each additional family member, Carte Blanche charges $10, and American Express has a $10 family plan whereby you can add any number of family cards for that sum.

For all the cards, the law says a cardholder is not responsible for fraudulent use of a lost or stolen card from the moment the loss is reported — in any event, the maximum liability is limited to $50.

However, if you're traveling around with many cards, the figure can add up, so it's a good idea to limit yourself to a minimum number of cards when vacationing.

If you intend to travel abroad, it's a good idea to take a general purpose bank card and a travel card, if you have one, because there is no one card that's universally accepted.

Here are some tips on charge cards if you intend to travel abroad:

- Leave your oil company cards at home. Though the names in Europe — Shell or Esso — may be the same, many countries do not honor North American cards.

- If you intend to call back home often, a telephone credit card may be a good idea. Phone cards are accepted just about everywhere, and you may be able to circumvent exorbitant hotel phone surcharges by charging the call to your card.

- Airlines serving Europe and Asia accept each others' cards as well as the big five general charge cards.

- Check the movements of currency values of the country you're in. You can come out ahead on conversions of dollars to foreign currency by charging when the foreign currency is becoming stronger.

- Before adding a tip on your charge slip, make sure that it already hasn't been included in your restaurant or bar tab. Tips and service charges in many European countries are automatically added to the bill.

- In distant lands (Sri Lanka for one) many establishments add a surcharge if you charge an item to your credit card because they say it takes so long for them to get their money. Check first before making any purchases.

Ceramic show at Chadron

Chadron — An invitational exhibit by 14 ceramic artists from across the United States will be on display at Chadron State College throughout June. Anthony Martin, instructor of art at CSC, said the Hands in Clay exhibit includes a variety of works from conventional pottery to the very unconventional.

The Chadron State gallery in Memorial Hall will be open from 9 a.m. to noon and 1-4 p.m. weekdays and from 1-4 p.m. Saturdays.

Among the exhibitors is CSC alumnus, Mike Chipperfield, now an assistant professor of art at the Ohio State University. Other artists in exhibition include Clayton Bailey of Hayward, Calif., Jim Darrow of Knoxville, Tenn., Tom Malone and Keith Knoblock of Normal, Ill.; Ken Little of Missoula, Mont.; Tim Mather of Athens, Ohio; David Middlebrook of Los Gatos, Calif.; Miska Petersham of Lake Oswego, Ore.; Fred Shepard of Murray, Ky.; Cathy Sher of Walnut Creek, Calif.; Paul Soldner of Claremont, Calif.; Tom Turner of Liberty, S. C., and Dennis Voss of Bozeman, Mont.

Flag of 1776

The first American flag was flown at the top of Prospect Hill in Somerville, Mass., Jan. 1, 1776. This flag, known as the "Grand Union," bore 13 alternating red and white stripes, but had the English cross of St. George and the Scots cross of St. Andrew.

Flight needn't be worry source

By John Justin Smith

(c) 1977 Chicago Daily News

Paris — So you're going to take your first jet trip to Europe this summer and you wonder what's going to happen to you?

Stop worrying. Here's your first-timer's guide to flying the Atlantic.

From Chicago, for example, you'll find host jet flights begin late in the afternoon, meaning that it's midnight or so in your destination city — meaning you're going to arrive early in the morning.

This is important for one reason. You're going to have a short night.

But wait, let's back up. Whatever time your jet leaves O'Hare, get there at least an hour ahead of time, even more. You may find the check-in line is long and you may need some time to do business with U.S. Customs.

You'll need time with the customs people if you're carrying foreign-made articles, such as cameras, expensive watches, tape recorders, typewriters, etc. When you come back home, you'll need to prove that these were yours when you left Chicago and not something you bought and must pay duty on. So the customs people — in just a few minutes — will furnish you a certificate saying these foreign-made articles were in your possession when you left home.

When you check in at the airline counter, you'll be asked to show your passport. The airlines are touchy about this. If they carry somebody to Europe and it is found that this somebody has no passport, the airline is responsible and must fly that person back to the States.

Oh, yes, during the check-in process, you'll be given an opportunity to select your seat. Take your time and do it carefully, deciding whether you want a seat in a smoking section or an area where smoking is not allowed.

Now you're ready to board your jet. You make your way to the appointed boarding area by passing through a security check. Your hand baggage will be put through a scanner that allows the inspectors to determine whether you have any contraband.

Warning: The sign says the X-ray scanner won't fog any film you're carrying. But fogged film can be a disaster. Why not play it safe and ask that your film be inspected by hand and not put through the scanner?

Now settle down and fasten your seat belt — and keep it fastened unless you're getting up to use the washroom or stretch your legs. It's just a little safer in the event your jet should hit some turbulence.

Soon after takeoff (how soon depends on the airline), you'll be asked if you want something to drink. If you're flying with us folks in the back of the plane, you'll be asked to pay $1 a drink for liquor (soft drinks free). If you fly first class, the drinks are included in the ticket price.

Then, again depending on the airline, you'll soon be served a meal. Between Chicago and Montreal on Air France, we were offered what was supposedly a light meal. Ha! It was a full meal, a large one, a good one, enough for anybody for the entire flight. But after Montreal, the nice lady was back, pushing more drinks and another meal.

We took a pass on this meal. We passed up, too, the movie that was shown. (You must rent headsets for $2.50 to get the movie's sound or several music programs.)

You say you can't sleep on a plane? Don't take any sleeping pills that might leave you groggy after your brief night. But do try to relax and sleep if you can.

With or without sleep, you'll be astounded at how soon the sun begins to rise somewhere ahead of the jet.

It won't hurt if you're the first one to awaken. This way you avoid the rush to use the washrooms.

After breakfast, begin to gather your head and property in preparation for landing and leaving the plane. Check and double-check to make sure you take all your coats, jackets, raincoats, flight bags, camera bags, sweaters and whatnot.

So you leave the plane. The first thing that happens is that you pass through "passport control," a desk where a man or woman examines your passport. This usually takes all of 15 seconds.

From there, signs will lead you to the place where you claim your baggage. Then you must, sometimes, go through customs for the country you're visiting.

But this seldom is a problem. In France and other countries, you'll find one gateway through customs marked "nothing to declare" and you may pass through without examination. (Not true when you return to the United States; everybody gets checked to see whether they're carrying more than the $100-a-person duty-free allowance.)

Tourist card German bargain

Purchasers of the new "Germanrail Tourist Card" are entitled to unlimited rail travel in West Germany. The card, available the year round, costs $85 for 9 days of travel and $115 for 16 days in second class, and $115 for 9 days and $160 for 16 days in first class. Special discounts on buses, river steamers and on trains through East Germany to West Berlin are also available with the card, which can be obtained from the German Federal Railroad, 630 Fifth Ave., New York 10020. It is available only to nonresidents of West Germany.

Sharp photo may require tripod use

By Bill Baughman

(c) 1977 Chicago Sun-Times

The tripod is the forgotten accessory of present day photography. It is more often left at home than taken along. Next to camera and lenses, your tripod is your most important piece of equipment.

Sharpness is not the only dividend. When the camera is on the tripod, the ground glass or viewfinder is steady for easy viewing. You can analyze composition without the distraction of holding the camera.

Once you have selected the right area to include in your photograph and you are waiting for action — such as a train to liven up an empty railroad trestle — you can watch for the right moment without looking through the camera.

Slanting horizons and distorted architectural lines often mar otherwise good photographs. By previewing your photograph while using a tripod, you can catch these compositional weaknesses.

Use a tripod with your telephoto lens. Many telephotos are slow (requiring longer exposure) and have shallow depth of field. It's difficult to hold them steady on a subject too. Telephoto lenses are sensitive to movement and magnify vibrations as well as the image when not used with a tripod.

For close-ups of flowers, wood textures, still life and other close work, the tripod is an aid in parallax correction and maintaining correct lens-to-subject distance for sharp focusing. The steady tripod allows longer exposure.

If your single-lens reflex camera was a delayed action mechanism, put your camera on the tripod and get into the picture.

The latest fully automatic instamatic (126 film) and pocket instamatic (110 film) miniature cameras can take time exposures of several seconds with the use of a tripod. Look for the tripod hole on bottom of your camera.

For night scenes outdoors and for pictures inside buildings in daytime with existing light, use your camera on a tripod, utilizing the automatic exposure control of your instamatic camera. Again, check your camera instruction booklet for time exposure data. Be very careful not to jar your tripod in tripping the shutter.

Some tips about tripods:

- A light wind can cause a tripod to vibrate, resulting in unsharp photographs. Wait till wind dies down.

- To keep from jiggling a camera, use a fairly long cable release to trip your shutter. Cable releases come in various lengths and must have the correct threading to screw into your cable release socket. Try the cable release before purchasing it.

- Before attaching your camera, always be sure all tripod leg sections are tightened securely. Make sure tripod legs are firmly positioned — with points dug into the ground or rubber tips holding snugly to the floor. Never leave your camera unattended on a tripod. The wind may blow the camera over.

- When buying a tripod, select one to fit the weight and size of your camera. A flimsy, poorly-designed tripod is worthless. Take your camera along, set up the tripod you intend to buy, and put your camera on it, making sure all adjustments are tightened.

- Look through your camera and make sure the camera can be adjusted to eye level. See if the adjustable head works right for your camera and that the camera locks tightly to the tripod head.

- If you haven't been using a tripod regularly, take one along on your next photographic expedition. Pictures taken by using a tripod will enlarge bigger and crisper than hand-held shots. Color pictures particularly will seem more brilliant because of overall sharpness provided by a tripod's steady effect.

'Rose' puts apron away permanently

"It was odd for us all," says Jean Marsh, recalling the filming of the final moments of "Upstairs, Downstairs." "Quite a shock, to have it all end."

Both as its co-creator, and as the actress who played Rose Buck, the Bellamys' prim housemaid, Ms. Marsh rose to stardom in the television series about old-fashioned British domesticity.

The 16 final episodes of the Masterpiece Theatre presentation, which PBS viewers have seen Sundays at 8 p.m. (with repeats on the Nebraska ETV stations at 11 p.m., Fridays) took the Bellamys through the frothy '20s, ending with 1929's Great Depression. Appropriately, Jean Marsh who, as Rose, takes a last look around the big house and speaks the final words of the final episode.

"It was a poignant moment," she remembers. "Since that day I have felt a gap in my life. I miss Rose as though she were a member of my family."

At the same time, playing the dependable housemaid was a far cry from playing Jean Marsh. "I adored her, but when the series ended it was like being let out of school," says the trim, fine-boned actress. "I'm not like Rose at all. I would never respect a family blindly just because they were in authority."

In fact, the Bellamys' authority began to erode as "Upstairs, Downstairs" moved this season from the Edwardian comforts of 1906 to the sometimes frantic years of post-war prosperity. "One thing I believe you saw in this final series is the change in attitude among the servants," Ms. Marsh comments. "They're not quite so subservient anymore. Rose gets a bit more independent and questions it all. But Rose will never really change totally. She's too old and set in her ways."

Not so Jean Marsh. Abandoning her starched uniform and starchy manners, she's turned younger, prettier and more assertive. Shortly after finishing "Upstairs, Downstairs," she appeared on Broadway in the all-star hit comedy "Habeas Corpus," then did "My Fat Friend" in Canada, and "The Importance of Being Earnest" and "Travesties" at the Mark Taper in repertory. She's opposite Michael Caine and Donald Sutherland in "The Eagle Has Landed," a major motion picture version of the best-seller.

And — a final proof of liberation — she's become a regular late night guest of Johnny Carson, to whom she revealed, before a television audience numbering 40 million, that since visiting America for "Habeas Corpus" she's "given up wearing underwear."

Rose would never have approved.

Rose? Jean Marsh) says a final farewell to Mrs. Bridges (Angela Baddeley) as the Bellamys and their domestic staff leave 165 Eaton Place at the conclusion of "Upstairs, Downstairs." Ms. Baddeley has died since filming of the series was completed.

After-show party

The closing of "Upstairs, Downstairs" on series tonight is being saluted with a live, two-hour coast-to-coast tribute. "Upstairs, Downstairs Farewell: A Million Dollar Party" will air immediately following at 9 p.m. on KUON and the Nebraska ETV Network.

Hosted by Masterpiece Theatre's Alistair Cooke, "A Million Dollar Party," the first event of its kind ever aired by the Public Broadcasting Service, will be a combination national fund-raising competition.

Among the many "Upstairs, Downstairs" cast members joining the party in the studios of WGBH/Boston will be the series co-creator Jean Marsh, Jacqueline Tong (Daisy) and Christopher Beeny (Edward), Simon Williams (Maj. James Bellamy) and Lesley-Ann Down (Georgina).

Others crossing the Atlantic to join the Boston party include two Bellamy family members who did not survive the series' final year — Rachel Gurney (who, as Lady Marjorie, perished aboard the Titanic at the beginning of the second year) and Meg Wynn Owen (James' wife Hazel, felled by influenza at the end of the third year).

The cast will recall the Bellamy saga with film clips of the series which has won seven Emmy Awards.

Operation Prime Time a challenge to networks

Lincoln-Grand Island stations KOLN-KGIN-TV and Omaha's WOWT are participating along with 84 other television stations across the country in a venture called Operation Prime Time, presenting a filmed dramatization of Taylor Caldwell's novel "Testimony of Two Men" as its first on-air project.

"Testimony of Two Men" is a four-part series totalling six-hours. Sometimes referred to as the beginning of a possible fourth network, this project will provide what its promoters call alternate programming to that of established networks.

KOLN-KGIN show the first episode of "Testimony of Two Men" from 8 to 10 p.m. Friday, the time period in which a CBS movie ("Support Your Local Gunfighter" this week) would be seen. WOWT opens "Testimony of Two Men" at 8 p.m. May 9, displacing the normal Monday night CBS fare of "Maude," "Phyllis" and "The Andros Targets."

"Testimony of Two men" is a story of two surgeons' passion for their work and their women. It spans the 35 years from the Civil War's end to the beginning of the 20th century.

"Testimony of Two Men" stars David Birney, Barbara Parkins and Steve Forrest. The cast includes such personalities as Ralph Bellamy, Dan Dailey, Ray Milland, Theodore Bikel, Cameron Mitchell, and Margaret O'Brien.

"It's quality," says Theodore Bikel: Interview on Page 4-TV.

Quality will survive, actor Bikel believes

By Holly Spence

Actor Theodore Bikel thinks the mini-series of Taylor Caldwell's best-selling novel "Testimony of Two Men" is a "miraculous" occasion for a number of reasons.

Not only is the six-hour, four-night special a top quality production in Bikel's estimation, but as he said in a telephone interview from New York, it might help change the re-run structure of the television networks.

"Testimony of Two Men" begins on KOLN-KGIN of Lincoln-Grand Island at 8 p.m. Friday and on WOWT of Omaha at 8 p.m. May 9.

It may prove that re-runs begin too early, he said, and that would make it a boon for actors who are out of work while old shows are repeated.

Bikel continued that "testimony of two men" will be "an interesting experience" because it may present unique competition in the re-run timeframe and result in higher quality programs.

The actor of stage, screen and TV said the success of the recent ABC series "Roots" had a lot to do with changing feelings.

No one anticipated the success of "Roots," said Bikel, "but it proved you don't have to show mediocre material."

Even though restaurants and motion picture theaters reported attendance dropped on those nights when "Roots" was shown, Bikel feels that films will never die.

"There are a lot of things that television can't be," he said. One is a "social occasion" created by the act of going out.

Bikel admitted there is a "cry of fear" among movie folk similar to that made of radio people when they thought television would be doom their medium. Bikel continued that cable and pay TV, caused for which he has testified, "may do a lot of good."

Pay television may make programs more accessible to the old, indigent or those who can't pay the price of motion pictures. With this system of television, many people can assemble to enjoy them, he said.

"But nothing kills anything

of quality," he continued. And that is where he thinks "Testimony of Two Men" fits into the scheme — it is quality. But coming to fruition involved two separate crews and two directors.

The shooting involved six weeks of "shuffling the actors around," he said. Bikel's character of Peter Heger, who dies "early on" from a kidney disease, didn't present as many problems as those who lived through the series.

Even though the directors were different, he said there were no particular problems "as long as the continuity was present. And it was, he stressed.

He is convinced that a viewer will not notice the move from one director to another.

While he was filming this special, Bikel was also taping a "Colombo" segment which "caused me to sleep little," he said.

The move from "Colombo" to the "Testimony of Two Men" set was not particularly difficult, but the accents were different and the characters were dissimilar. But that, he said, is what being an actor is all about.

This series is innocative in that "it is a costume thing, like a big extravaganza, panoramic and historic," said Bikel.

The appeal for him in this series is "historical, passionate — a gothic quality.

TESTIMONY OF TWO MEN

Here is Taylor Caldwell's gripping novel of two surgeons' passion for their work and their women. A sprawling epic, spanning the years from the end of the Civil War to the turn of the century, it pulsates with love and lust, power, greed and murder.

Testimony of Two Men is now a most important television event!

First Nixon interview

"The Nixon Interviews," in which David Frost questions Richard M. Nixon, go on the air at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday on KOLN-KGIN. The 90-minute first interview is to be about the Watergate breakin and the scandal following — a situation that ended with Nixon resigning from the presidency. Three more programs follow, on May 12, 19 and 25. The total of six hours on the air is being distilled from 28 hours of confrontation between Frost and Nixon.

Jim Crockett does gardening at new time

The weekly series "Crockett's Victory Garden" moves to a new morning time as it begins its second season on Saturday at 11:30 a.m. on KUON and the other ETV stations. Jim Crockett will continue to advise and instruct on growing everything from asparagus to zinnias. On the new series Crockett will tackle some projects that were too large to undertake in last season's Victory Garden.

He'll go "on location" to plant a rose garden and construct a rock garden. He'll take his horticultural expertise to real suburban gardens to cure some of their more commonly found ills and visit an experimental field station to see what's "growing on" in the future. Then it's on to Europe to take in the spring bulb festival in Holland and the Chelsea flower show in England. He will also visit "Gardener's World" and "Pebble Mill," BBC television programs that have delighted British green thumbs for years.

Hibernation

Cold alone does not trigger hibernation in animals, says National Geographic. It is linked to the endocrine glands and nervous systems, scientists think, but its exact cause is unknown.

Biggs Consort at Doane today

Crete — The John Biggs Consort, a touring ensemble specializing in early music, will present a public concert at 3 p.m. today in the Communications Auditorium at Doane College.

The consort is based on the West Coast. In 1972 it was chosen to accompany the late Basil Bathbone in his "One-Man Shakespeare" presentations. Its members have performed in Elizabethan costume at the San Diego and Ashland, Ore., Shakespeare festivals.

Paid for by supporters of Steve Slaikau, a strong voice for people and education.

NBC will have Sanford, Chico

By Robert L. Rose

(c) 1977 Chicago Daily News

Hollywood — Over at NBC, the executives are trying to figure out how to fight comedy with comedy — the network's two biggest laugh shows have been crippled by death and defection.

"But the two shows — 'Chico and the Man,' and 'Sanford and Son' — are definitely going to be back in the fall, albeit in different forms," said NBC vice president John J. McMahon.

Redd Foxx quit Sanford to join ABC, once the networks' poor relation but now an embarrassing front runner over NBC, which is now No. 3 among the networks. His co-star, Demond Wilson, refuses to continue unless the network gives him a huge pay increase. The series, perhaps renamed "Sanford Arms," may continue, centering on the rest of the ensemble.

Freddie Prinze killed himself after becoming television's youngest new superstar of comedy, leaving Jack Albertson as the lone star of "Chico and the Man," but with a group of supporting stars whose roles have been developing.

"We've got 22 half-hour comedy pilots this year, more than we've ever done before. That's the major focal point of our effort," McMahon said in a recent interview.

NBC also is crossing its fingers on the CPO Sharkey series, starring Don Rickles, which is slowly beginning to find an audience. "We've nurtured Sharkey along," said McMahon. "It's getting a 29 share in a very tough time period (Wednesday night, opposite ABC's 'Baretta')."

As for the fresh stuff, NBC has pinned its hopes on comedian Richard Pryor. The problem is: Can this brilliant funnyman shape his material to the more pristine demands of TV after pleasing Las Vegas audiences?

"I think in Pryor we have lightning in a bottle. He could be a major television hit in a variety show," McMahon said. "The only thing that can stop him is Pryor himself. If he wants to accommodate to television, and he says he does, if he can show some restraint, we'll have a marvelous show."

In the desperate search for comedy, NBC is not only hanging on to what's left, but also is going back to what it discarded seasons ago — "Laugh-In."

"George Schlatter is coming back to do six Laugh-Ins to see if there's any hope it can reemerge. There will be a whole new Laugh-In group," McMahon said.

Here are other NBC comedy hopefuls for fall, with comments by McMahon.

• "Bay City Amusement Company" — "A cross between the original Dick Van Dyke Show and Saturday Night, with unknowns playing the parts." In this version, the new Van Dyke works for Saturday Night, he has a young Mary Tyler Moore-type wife, and the parts of Morey Amsterdam and Rose Marie "are played by young, crazy people who write and perform for Saturday Night."

• "Hearts of the West" — The show, written by Larry Gelbart of M-A-S-H, is "very funny. It's about a kid cowboy who comes to Hollywood in the '30s and gets involved in making movies."

• "Quark" — Dick Benjamin stars in a science-fiction spoof. "It's 'Star Trek' done as comedy."

• "Accidental Family" — A new version of the Odd Couple: "Two men, one refined, the other a jock, have three kids each. The emphasis is on the men's efforts to raise the kids without mothers."

But there's more to life than comedy:

• "Quail Lake" — Kent McCord plays a Malibu (Calif.) fireman. It's "a modern-day 'Little House on the Prairie.'"

• "Stoner" — "A young black doctor goes out into the streets to help people."

• "Possessed" — "James Farentino plays an ex-priest. He gets involved in a serious accident. His heart stops, and in that instant he sees all the evil that exists. He then realizes his mission is to combat evil."

Wheels were the reason for this building, in the same area as the wheeled vehicle shown in No. 537. But this building still stands; it's no replica.

110 years ago this week

1867: A contract for planting 270 trees on the Courthouse square in Nebraska City was awarded in response to a "beautify Nebraska" program promoted by Gov. David Butler.

The Nebraska Advertiser in Brownville deplored importation of non-Nebraskans to fill federal posts in the state.

Mail delivery was the subject of considerable complaint in Nebraska.

1877: Several states were appointing days of prayer to thwart the threatened grasshopper invasion.

Immigrants were pouring into the Republican Valley.

The long-rumored merger of the Nebraska Railway with the Burlington was officially acknowledged. Trains from Nebraska City and Seward were running into the Burlington & Missouri depot in Lincoln.

1887: Omaha scored 37 runs in eight innings against Lincoln's Western League baseball team. The disaster was blamed on the failure of a new pitcher, Cyclone Miller to arrive.

Frank L. Sheldon planned to build a block at 11th and N and also one on No. 11th.

1897: A price war among Lincoln ice dealers was on. The Board of Education offered $25,000 in bonds for sale, but received only two bids and the sale was postponed.

The Nebraska Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional a law giving owners of stock killed by railroads double the value of the animals.

1907: F. W. Brown was elected mayor of Lincoln by 58 votes.

Lincoln real estate brokers felt the temporary closing of saloons was having an adverse effect on business.

1917: World War I came to Callaway when a German-American hostess at a quilting bee was accused of insulting the U.S. flag.

It was rumored that Fort Robinson would be used to train troops bound for the war.

John Barleycorn was bid a fond farewell in Omaha on the last day before prohibition went into effect. Liquor sales during the last days reached record proportions.

1927: A mechanically operated tractor was demonstrated at the University of Nebraska's Ag College.

Shriners broke sod for their new country club (now Hillcrest).

Police used water hoses to disperse a riot at a fraternity house on the University of Nebraska campus.

James Dahlman, Omaha's "cowboy mayor," won re-election for the seventh time.

1937: Oren S. Copeland was elected mayor of Lincoln.

Mr. and Mrs. John Arp of Fremont celebrated their 66th wedding anniversary, saying they had 157 living descendants.

1947: The Legislature killed a bill that would have allowed the Tri-County Public Power and Irrigation district to use Platte River water to irrigate land in the Republican River watershed.

The Federal Communications Commission granted permission for establishing radio station KOLN in Lincoln. These call letters later were transferred to a television station and the radio station later became KLIN.

Nebraska dairy farmers won a legislative battle to bar serving margarine in state institutions.

1957: A "hold the line" biennial state budget $66.6 million was laid before the Legislature by the Budget Committee. It was a considerable reduction from Gov. Victor Anderson's recommendations.

Omaha Police Chief Harry Green was relieved of duty during an investigation of possible police implication in burglaries.

1967: A record smashing turnout of over 33,000 voters elected Sam Schwartzkopf mayor of Lincoln.

Most of Nebraska had record-setting late-season snow. A blizzard-like storm in the Panhandle left drifts several feet deep and closed roads. Lincoln had three to four inches of wet snow later in the week.

A Statehood Centennial Health Fair at Pershing Auditorium drew crowds of as many as 21,000 a day.

Last week's picture

Free rides were given in this one-horse street car during Wymore's Diamond Jubilee in August of 1896, when this photo was taken. Built by Jess Benson, the car is a replica of the street car used between 1885 and 1896 on the streets of Wymore and between Wymore and nearby Blue Springs.

Butterfly stamps issue June 6

A block of four 13-cent commemorative stamps featuring butterflies representative of four geographic areas will be issued in Indianapolis, Ind., on June 6, the U.S. Postal Service announces.

Wildlife artist Stanley Galli, of Kentfield, Calif. designed the stamps. In addition to the geographical representation, Galli selected species of butterflies of contrasting coloration to provide design variety. The species shown are the swallowtail (Papilio oregonius), the checkerspot (Euphydryas phaeton), the dogface (Colias eurydice), and the orange-tip (Anthocaris midea).

Galli designed the two Wildlife Conservation blocks of four stamps issued in 1971 and 1972.

The stamps in the standard commemorative size block of four are arranged horizontally. The image area size of a single stamp is 1.44 x 0.84 inches or 36.57 x 21.33 millimeters. The stamps will be printed on the gravure press; the colors are yellow, orange, purple, gray, umber and black. There will be 50 stamps per pane and six plate numbers.

Procedures for ordering first day of issue cancellations are as follows:

Customers affixing stamps. Customers may purchase the stamps at their local post offices and affix them to their own envelopes. All envelopes must be addressed; peelable return address labels are recommended for this purpose. Stamps must be affixed in the upper right corner of envelopes approximately 1/4 inch from the top and 1/4 inch from the right side. Return addresses should be placed low and well to the left of postal card thickness should be inserted in each cover. Not later than June 21 — (orders must be postmarked by that date) — the envelopes may be forwarded to "First Day Cancellations, Postmaster, Indianapolis, IN 46206" for cancellation and return through the mailstream. No remittance is required.

Postal Service affixing stamps. Except for affixing stamps and addressing order, follow the procedures listed above. Address orders to "Butterfly stamps, Postmaster, Indianapolis, IN 46206." The cost is 13 cents per stamp to be affixed to covers (52 cents for the block of four). Return addresses should be placed low and well to the left.

especially when the order is for the block of four, and envelopes should be marked lightly in pencil in the upper right corner showing which stamps are desired. Do not send cash. Personal checks will be accepted on orders up to the limit of 200 covers. Postage stamps are unacceptable as payment. Orders must be postmarked no later than June 21.

Car for South, West

By Tad Burness
Special Writer

Here's a rare southern car for your Auto Album collection. It came about because Linda Farrar, Sunday magazine editor of the Shreveport (La.) Times, asked for information on the Bour-Davis, a car that was once built in Shreveport. The details looked like a good subject for Auto Album, too.

Like many limited-production, "assembled" makes of the early '20s, the Bour-Davis used a six-cylinder Continental engine. The Model 20 had a 224-c.i.d. Continental, but the new "21" which joined it early in 1920 (and which apparently superseded the "20") had a larger Continental powerplant, plus a longer wheelbase, deeper frame, 13-disc clutch and other improvements.

A 1920 ad stated: "No other line on the market offers a more attractive selling proposition, especially to Southern and Western dealers, than the Bour-Davis."

"Short shipping distance is a big advantage. Shipping expense is small."

"And in the Bour-Davis you will find a car specially designed to meet the particularly difficult conditions to be encountered in the South and West." Springs were especially designed for heavy-duty use on rough rural roads.

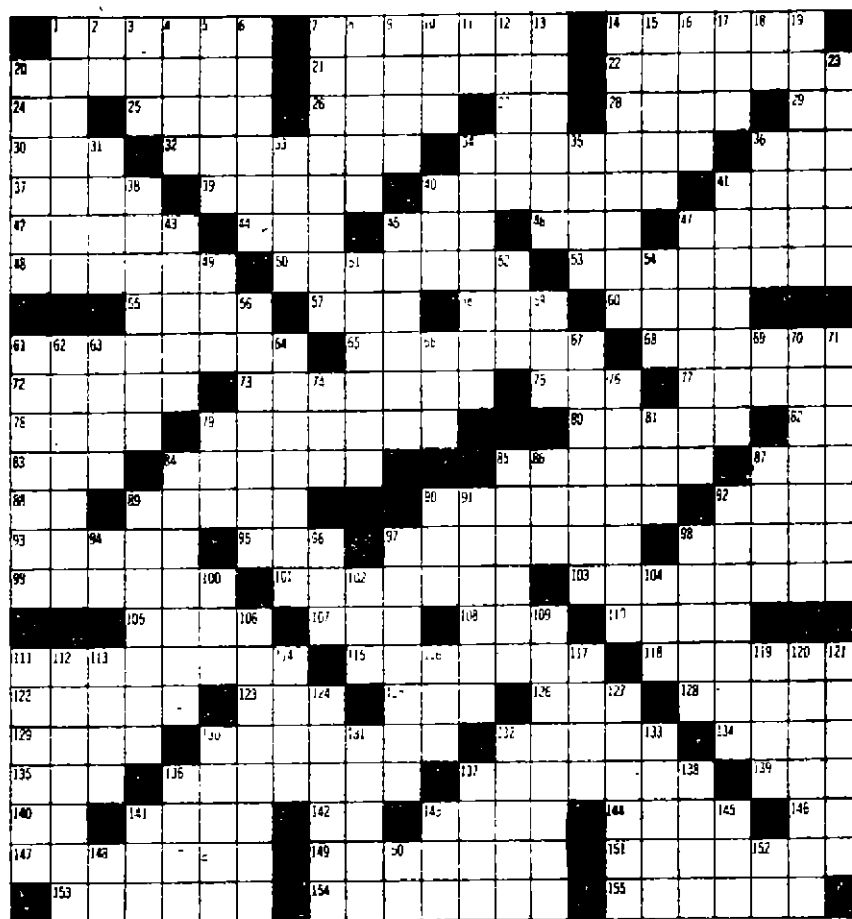

Upholstery was of genuine leather, in a choice of four types. There were three choices of body colors. The top was lined, and there were tonneau and inspection lamps, a locking compartment for a vacuum bottle, and side curtains that opened and closed with the doors.

Prisons have produced their own special currency

By Leon Lindheim
Special Writer

Some prisons have issued their own currency. For one, Nevada State prison at the turn of the century issued tokens with a value of 25 cents, 50 cents and $1. These were used to pay prisoners for work done and were redeemable at the prison commissary.

Sing Sing prison also used tokens and they are of interest because of the unique slogan on the reverse: "Do Good Make Good."

This idea of a substitute for money in a prison or prisoner-of-war camp is not new. Prisoners are usually denied the use of money and instead are issued tokens, since these pieces would be useless in the event of an escape.

Coin Q and A

Q. Is it true that Hawaiian coins are rare?

A. There is only one issue of coins of Hawaii. This was during the reign of King Kalakaua. These coins were struck in 1883. Kalakaua visited Europe in 1881 and was impressed by the beautiful coins featuring the various heads of states' pictures on the coinage.

There is a great similarity to the design that he chose for his coinage and that of Napoleon III of France, Leopold II of Belgium and Oscar II of Sweden, with a crown and mantled arms on the reverse.

The Hawaiian coinage of 1883 was limited to 500,000 $1-dollar coins; 700,000 50-cent coins; 500,000 quarters and 250,000 ten-cent pieces. Part of this issue was remelted, and of course, some became mutilated or lost. By today's standards, this would be considered a scarce issue, but not a rare one.

Q. What is the story about the McDermott 1913 Liberty Head nickel? Where did it get its name?

A. Much has been written about five nickels that were struck in 1913, using the design used from 1883 through 1912. In 1913 the Buffalo-Indian Head five-cent piece was introduced.

All five coins in 1922 were acquired by Col. E. H. R. Green, collector-son of the famous "witch of Wall St.," Hetty Green. After his death, one was purchased by Eric Newman, one by F.C.C. Boyd and the remaining three by James Kelly. This was in 1942. According to my information, Kelly sold one of the three to coin dealer J. V. McDermott for $900.

In 1957, McDermott was reported to have refused $19,000 for the coin. After his death in 1966, his widow arranged for the coin to be sold at auction at the sale conducted in association with the annual convention of the American Numismatic Association, held in Miami Beach in August 1967. Strangely enough James Kelly was the auctioneer.

The coin sold for a record $46,000. The purchaser was Aubrey Beebe, well-known Omaha coin dealer. He still owns the coin and still refers to it as the "McDermott nickel."

Getting Goods and Services to Customers

By Dr. Arthur Kraft
Professor, Management, UN-L
College of Business Administration
SUN Faculty Consultant

Marketing is distribution of goods and services. The selling of goods and services requires creating demand, finding a buyer, pricing, and transfer of ownership.

Since firms compete with other firms, they must create a demand for their goods and services.

They must work to convince the prospective buyer that these goods and services are valuable. Firms create demand for goods and services by means of sales promotion.

There are two approaches which may be used to find a buyer: personal and impersonal.

The personal sales approach occurs when a salesperson is employed to assist potential buyers and induce them to buy various goods and services.

The salesperson may operate in either an active or passive manner. The latter occurs when a salesperson stands in the background and is merely available if the customer has a question.

The potential customer usually seeks out the salesperson. This occurs in most discount, furniture, and appliance stores.

A more active approach occurs when the salesperson seeks out potential customers. This requires a salesperson who is very knowledgeable about the benefits and advantages of a particular product.

Such a sales approach is taken when an insurance salesman calls on potential clients and explains the type of life insurance package that is best suited to their particular needs.

Employers who prefer the passive approach do not usually require that their salespeople undergo rigorous selection and training process. Such positions are normally characterized by low pay and high turnover rate.

On the other hand when a more active sales approach is used, the selection and training requirements are more involved.

This is especially true at the industrial level when the salesperson will need strong behavioral and technical skills. They should be well educated and undergo extensive training.

Once individuals have acquired such skills, they are a valuable asset and the firm will make every effort to retain their services. Stockbrokers, computer salespeople, and many manufacturers' representatives fall into this category.

The impersonal approach to selling occurs with advertising. There is no direct contact with the customer even though the emphasis is the same as in the personal approach.

SETTING A PRICE

Once a prospective buyer is found either through an active or passive sales effort, a price must be set for the goods and services.

This is important because the price must be sufficient to cover all of the direct and indirect expenses associated with marketing these particular goods and services. There also must be sufficient revenue to yield a profit for the firm.

If the price charged is too high, there may not be adequate demand to generate sufficient revenue. On the other hand, if the price is too low, demand may be high, but the cost of marketing each unit may exceed the revenue generated.

Many factors must be taken into consideration when determining the price to charge for an item.

Demand for a good or service is important. If there is high demand, the price of an item will tend to rise. This is especially true if the item is in relatively short supply.

This is one of the arguments used by many economists for increasing the price of energy resources and food commodities.

If there is little demand for an item, its price will tend to fall. This phenomenon occurred when the demand for black and white television sets declined. As color sets became more popular, black and white sets decreased in price.

In the case of large supply and large demand, the price of the good will fluctuate as it moves toward an equilibrium price that clears the market for the good taking into account the supply and demand.

Demand and supply, however, are only part of the picture. A producer must consider the costs associated with the item. In the long run the firm must receive a price that not only covers all costs but allows it to earn a profit.

TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP

The transfer of ownership occurs through channels of distribution. This happens when the item passes from the producer to the consumer.

The transfer may occur in a number of different ways.

The simplest channel of distribution arises when the item passes directly from the producer to the consumer. This mechanism rarely occurs today. Sometimes agricultural commodities may be sold directly to the consumer but there are few instances of this direct contact between the producer and the consumer.

Most channels involve a middleman who operates between the producer and the consumer. This situation has arisen for a number of reasons.

Mass production of items leads to mass distribution, which results in specialization. Manufacturers tend to specialize in the production and development of products. This has become common place as a result of increased competition to develop new and better products.

Thus, manufacturers want to devote all of their efforts to these activities. The marketing and distribution activities have become very complex. For this reason a middleman is needed who operates between the producers and consumers. These individuals are specialists in the marketing and distribution of goods and services.

Sometimes there may be only one middleman. Under these circumstances you have a manufacturer who deals with a retailer. The retailer is the middleman who ultimately deals with the consumer.

It is the retailer who markets and distributes the goods. The retailer will purchase the goods in larger quantities from the manufacturer than the consumer would.

Such a situation occurs when an automobile manufacturer sells his product through an automobile dealership or when a farmer sells his produce directly to a supermarket.

Two middlemen may enter the channel of distribution when there is both a wholesaler and a retailer. The manufacturer sells directly to the wholesaler who then deals with the retailer. It is the retailer who ultimately sells to the consumer.

This approach is used extensively because the wholesaler buys items from the manufacturer in extremely large lots. Wholesalers are able to do this because they have close contact with retailers.

This takes quite a bit of the burden off of the manufacturer. They now have a source for their product and they can become even less involved in the distribution process.

They are dealing in larger size lots and with fewer individuals than if they dealt directly with the retailers. This reduces the cost and risk of distribution that the manufacturer normally must bear.

The manufacturer may now devote more time to production efforts with even less time devoted to distribution.

The wholesaler incurs the costs and risk because he must take title to the goods and usually extend credit to the retailer.

RETAIL AND WHOLESALE

Retailers and wholesalers are both specialized middlemen. Retailers sell directly to the consumer and comprise over half of all businesses in the United States.

Some retail establishments, such as major department stores, are large corporations with many employees. Others, such as the local delicatessen, are sole proprietorships with only a few employees.

The large retail establishment usually deals directly with the manufacturer. The small operation depends on the wholesaler to extend credit and act in an inventory storage capacity.

Retailing is a very competitive operation with an extremely high failure rate. Both the large and small retailer may find themselves in bankruptcy.

For these reasons it is extremely important that retailers anticipate the potential demands of their customers. They must not only have the right selection of goods on hand to meet the needs of the customer, but they also must have sufficient quantities in inventory to satisfy these demands.

A retailer must not only maintain adequate inventories but should have access to a wholesaler or manufacturer who can supply additional items if needed.

If the demand does not materialize, then the retailer is stuck with excess inventories. For this reason the retailer must be actively involved in sales promotion to create demand and find potential buyers.

There are many types of retailers. One of the most common types is the small independent retail store. This is usually a sole proprietorship with relatively few employees. It also tends to concentrate in specialized goods. Such operations would include small clothing stores, drug stores, hardware stores, and specialty shops.

The department store is a much larger version of the independent retail store. It carries a variety of goods and is usually not organized as a sole proprietorship.

The store may have several employees and may deal directly with some manufacturers. Such stores may sell clothing, furniture, food and drugs, automobile accessories and home products, etc.

The supermarket is another example of a retail establishment. Its success is based on sales promotion through advertising and competitive pricing.

There is little sales promotion of an active personal nature. Some passive sales promotion may occur in specialty departments, such as the meat, vegetables and fresh fruit sections, but most of the sales efforts are through advertising.

In recent years supermarkets have expanded their variety of goods so they now offer cosmetics, household goods, clothing, etc.

The mail order house is one of the oldest retail operations. Potential customers receive catalogs from which they select the goods they wish to order.

The items may then be shipped by mail or through United Parcel Service (UPS). The goods may be shipped directly to the consumer or to local retail outlets operated by the mail order house.

Such establishments are able to remain competitive because of the wide variety of items offered and because they usually charge lower prices than would be charged by independent retailers or department stores.

Mail order houses generally operate with low overhead expenses. In addition, they usually deal directly with the manufacturer so they receive some savings.

A chain store is a group of retail establishments which sell similar merchandise and have a common owner. Chain stores may be supermarkets, department stores or variety stores.

In addition chain stores sell drugs, shoes, men's and women's apparel, and specialty items. On the basis of the size of these operations, many economies may be realized. They have large scale buying of merchandise and may be able to deal directly with the manufacturers.

They may also have widespread hiring, training and sales promotion efforts. In addition, they can afford to hire people with special training that a smaller operation would be unable to do.

The risk is spread over all operations rather than a single store. The chain store can afford to hire highly skilled marketing, management and sales personnel because of its large scale activities.

The size of their operations also makes it easier to raise funds for expansion and remodeling.

A discount house is a retail operation that sells merchandise at a price below the manufacturers' suggested list price. Discount houses usually sell a variety of items; most of which are well-established national brands. They are normally characterized by self-service operations, no customer service department and low cost operations.

Use life insurance to create an instant estate

By Gene Kelly

Life insurance is a unique financial tool.

No investment can create an instant estate. Life insurance does.

Life insurance buys you time to pursue the goal that's been called the "living" estate — becoming financially independent so you, in theory, will no longer need life insurance.

You buy life insurance to protect your dependents, not yourself.

Only life insurance "allows you to place an unlimited insurable value on yourself . . . to capitalize on the human life value," says Perry Strombeck, New York Life agent in Lincoln.

Most life insurance actually is sold to create estates, notes Bob Nowak, agent for Northwestern Mutual Life. "People don't realize what a tremendously flexible financial instrument life insurance is," he said.

For example, by merely adding so-called "family" term insurance rider to a cash-value policy, you can guarantee the insurability of an unborn child.

Or a declining term policy can give those who are dependent on you the secure feeling that the mortgage on a home or business will be paid off should you die.

Bob Lott says he firmly suggests to potential investors that they put together a realistic life insurance program before they begin moving dollars into investments. Lott is Lincoln division manager of IDS Life Insurance.

Little appreciated, until death comes, is the role that life insurance can have in the quick settling of an estate; these funds are available immediately so beneficiaries can pay final expenses and taxes.

Lengthy probate, in which the executor might have to sell property to pay off final obligations, may be avoided.

Is it best to buy term, cash-value or a combination of these policies?

Each person's obligations, responsibilities and financial situation are so different that even estate planning specialists hesitate to generalize about which type of policy is best.

Everyone wants maximum protection at the least cost.

While a cash value insurance policy builds cash benefits, term insurance provides pure coverage for death — protection — at a cost much less than the cash value type.

Although cash value policies called whole life or straight life are still the most popular, term insurance sales are on the upswing.

Is buying a term policy the same thing as renting life insurance?

You don't have to buy five or 10-year term policies.

Ever hear of level term to age 65?

Or decreasing term to age 65? Or to age 100?

They're available, but the buyer must be realistic about term protection. It declines with the passing years and it becomes more expensive each year to restore that protection.

If you are able to pursue a separate, regular investment program, the declining protection may not bother you.

How can you afford the premiums on as much protection as you actually need?

Insurance agents almost universally suggest you do this with a combination of cash-value and term policies. Term or declining term riders can be added to existing cash-value policies.

Strombeck says the concept of the pairing of declining term and cash-value policies in a so-called "economizer" package is gaining wide acceptance among estate planners.

"It gives you the best of both worlds . . . the best features of both types of coverage," he says.

"Dividends from a cash-value policy are used to buy paid-up insurance, to offset the decrease in term coverage. In effect, the coverage remains almost constant."

How much life insurance is enough?

"I always tell people that depends on what they want to get accomplished during their life," says Strombeck.

If you're the typical family of four, with the raising and education of young children to ponder, consider putting a $100,000 decreasing term to age 65 policy on the breadwinner.

You can do that for about the same annual premium as a $10,000, 20-year pay life policy.

Even if you're buying term — pure protection — make sure the policy is renewable and convertible, at your option, without evidence of insurability.

Since conventional cash-value policies often appreciate at a far slower rate than even passbook savings accounts, life insurance obviously isn't a very good "investment," the experts agree.

"It's not intended for that purpose," Lott says. "Anyone who is trying to make life insurance his savings or investment program, is on the wrong track. Life insurance is a protection program."

In Nebraska, the agent who tries to sell life insurance as an investment or "savings" policy can be in big trouble. It just can't be sold here using those claims without violating the state insurance code.

"It's certainly not an investment, in the usual sense," said Jim Valdez, counsel for the Nebraska Insurance Dept. "If it's sold as anything other than life insurance, there is a potential for misrepresentation," he continued.

Viewing it as an investment, remember that:

—Most cash-value policies appreciate at a rate that's far slower than passbook savings.

—When you die, beneficiaries don't get both the cash value and the face amount of a policy — a huge misconception. They get the face amount only.

—If you borrow against a policy's cash value — say $4,000 on a $10,000 policy, your insurance protection drops to $6,000.

—A life insurance dividend isn't at all like a stock dividend; it is the refund to a policyholder of an overcharge in premiums, says the Internal Revenue Service.

Life insurance agents hear almost daily the statement from potential insurance buyers that they intend to "buy term and invest the difference."

Lott says the theory is very sound. "But few people get around to putting the money aside, let alone investing it. Even if they do that, the savings seem to get spent," he said.

"What happens then to their long-term financial goals?"

"Realistically, the only way a lot of people will achieve them is through cash-value policies," Lott explained.

Lott believes that term policies fill a vital role, if they cover a specific obligation or provide protection that won't be needed later.

But many term policies can't be renewed beyond age 60.

"I've rarely seen a person in his golden years who has less of a need for financial liquidity, than when he was young," Nowak of Northwestern Mutual says.

"While term coverage is the most common way to create an estate, cash-value policies are the best way to conserve an estate," he continued.

The best example, he believes, is the farmer who "wakes up one bright morning to realize that his land and equipment are worth a fortune. His chief problem — and it can be a very emotional one — is how to achieve enough liquidity to pass them along to his family."

"He doesn't know whether he'll die at age 49 or 90. Also he doesn't know how much his property may appreciate by the time of his death."

"His dilemma is liquidity, and you don't achieve that with a term policy that may not be renewable — at any price."

Nowak says that someone with only term insurance "can find they are in a fantastic, unsolvable situation of not even being able to afford to renew it . . . they then are apt to think that they'd better hurry up and die, ending the struggle."

Misconceptions abound regarding the cash value of a policy.

If you borrow on the cash value, paying 4½ to 6% interest, aren't you really making use of your own "savings"?

The cash you've "deposited" in a policy is not like a savings account; legally it belongs to the insurance company, unless you cash in (surrender) the policy and lose all the protection.

Wait. If you borrow, you have an additional interest payment and you've reduced your life insurance coverage — by the amount you borrowed.

Better yet, use the cash value of a policy as collateral in getting a conventional bank loan.

Insurers are finding that their market has changed dramatically.

Some are abandoning the high-cost, captive-agency system, in favor of paying commissions to "independent" brokers who represent a half dozen or more companies.

Some are turning to persons licensed both to sell life insurance and recommend investments — to help you achieve a balance between your death estate and your living estate.

What sort of major changes are agents grappling with?

• Within the past couple of years, chances are you've taken part in a retirement or profit-sharing plan where you work.

If your employer offers neither, or you're self-employed, you've at least asked questions about setting up an IRA (individual retirement account) or a Keogh account.

• Many employers also offer group life insurance as a fringe benefit, usually at rock-bottom, level-term rates. You might want to let some of this bargain term replace an older policy bought at higher rates.

And even if you decide to keep all the coverage you have, it may make good sense to convert it from cash value to level-term or declining-term.

Why? As your tax-sheltered retirement account grows, the protection role of your life insurance can be phased out.

Life insurance "investments" are part of some individual retirement accounts — paired with mutual funds. If you're into such an account or are considering one, hedge the ultimate value of your IRA with term insurance, since it's much less costly.

Life insurance myths

You've probably heard the comment that cash-value life insurance is permanent coverage, while term insurance is temporary. True?

Actually both types are permanent, as long as premiums are paid when due.

However, a term policy often presents a dual problem that can affect its permanency.

—You may not be able to extend or renew it, at the end of a specific time period — just when you need it most.

—The premium for renewing it may be so high, you can't afford the coverage.

In either case, it did become temporary insurance. If it were bought to cover an obligation that no longer exists, then the fact that it was temporary actually doesn't matter.

Is it worth your time to compare the cost of life insurance, assuming the level of protection is the same?

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) recently said that cash-value policies with the same annual premium often differ substantially in "cost," depending on their dividend scales and the growth of their cash values.

As a life insurance purchaser, you may be tempted to equate the size of the premium with the actual cost of the policy. The FTC defines the cost of a policy as the difference between what the purchaser pays and what is returned in dividends and protection.

The actual cost of essentially the same life insurance protection varies greatly. The FTC staff found this example: The amount of profit or overhead retained by insurance companies ranged from $894 to $2,291 — on a comparable $25,000 policy that matures in 20 years and is bought by a 35-year-old man.

A policy is a contract between you and the insurer. But you should never hesitate to make changes in a policy. Some examples:

• You have a so-called participating policy that pays dividends; this can be either a cash value or a term policy. You've been pocketing the dividend.

You have several dividend options:

—Let them accrue as part of your policy. They can be used to reduce your premium. Accruing dividends do earn interest, and it is taxed.

—Apply the dividends to additional paid-up insurance.

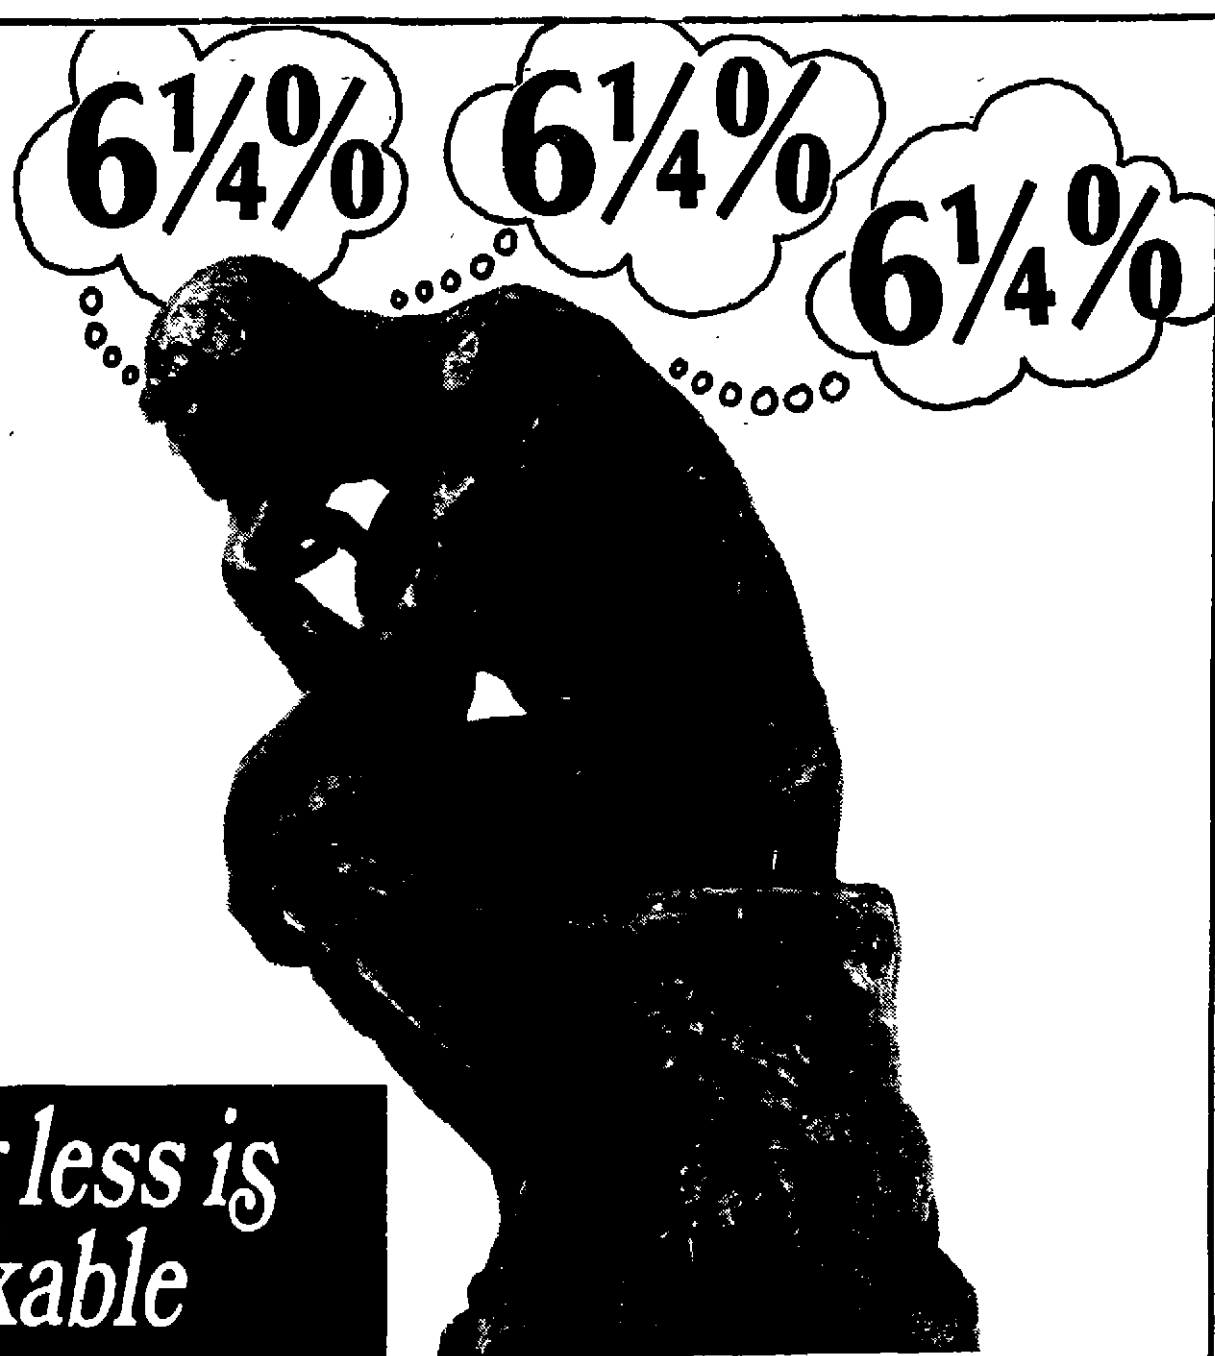

—Let them pay for additional term insurance.

• While the new estate-tax credits and more generous marital deductions mean that larger estates will go untaxed, you still should consider giving or assigning away the ownership of insurance policies, so that the death payoffs do not become part of your estate — and therefore are not subject to federal estate taxes.

Life insurance funds are available immediately to pay debts, final expenses and taxes — without waiting for probate of your will.

When a specific beneficiary is named, the proceeds are largely protected against attachment by your creditors, says the American Council of Life Insurance.

Look behind scenes when choosing a savings 'nest'

You want your savings to earn the highest interest rate possible. But choosing the thrift institution that advertises the highest rate may not make the most cents for you.

When browsing through these ads, remember that the institution is required by law to state, when mentioning interest rates, the true annual interest rate paid on savings — and any special conditions customers must meet to get the full rate.

The plain truth is that institutions advertising the top stated rate of interest may not actually pay you the top total of dollars on your funds.

Information not included in the ad is more likely to reveal exactly how much interest you will get. Find out, for instance, how often the promised interest is compounded, so that your interest earns interest; when does your deposit start to draw interest; is there a penalty for frequent withdrawals?

Banks are allowed to pay 5% yearly on savings accounts; savings and loan associations may pay 5½%. In order to be competitive, no institution will offer less than those rates, unless there are unusual circumstances.

Savings institutions are allowed latitude in some areas: when your deposit begins to draw interest, how often the interest is compounded and whether or not there is a penalty for frequent withdrawals.

The best possible arrangement for the saver is to have the account earn interest from the date of deposit to the date of withdrawal. Some institutions require money to be on deposit for a full quarter before paying interest.

To illustrate the difference, suppose you deposited $1,000 in your account Jan. 15 and withdrew it Feb. 15. Under the first system, you would earn several dollars in interest, depending on how the institution compounds. Under the second, you would receive no interest.

How often the institution compounds your interest is important because once added to your account, it also is working for you. You begin to earn interest on your interest, on your interest... and so on.

The sharp saver looks for interest compounded daily. However, some institutions compound interest monthly or quarterly. While the difference may result in only a few tenths of a per cent — 10 or 20 cents on $100 — it may be important if you have a large sum of money on deposit, or if you can keep from dipping into your savings for a year or more.

Many savings account ads explain how often the interest is compounded, and include another figure with the annual interest rate, called the annual yield. An institution which

Compound interest means you earn interest on the interest paid to you, as well as interest on your deposits. Here's how your account would grow, with and without interest compounded quarterly:

Number of Years	Savings Without Compound Interest	Savings With Compound Interest	Savings Increase Represented by Compound Interest
1	$260	$266.45	$6.45 (2.5%)
2	520	546.48	26.48 (5.10%)
3	780	840.77	60.77 (7.8%)
5	1,300	1,475.10	175.10 (13.5%)
10	2,600	3,366.23	766.23 (29.5%)
15	3,900	5,790.74	1,890.74 (48.5%)
20	5,200	8,899.04	3,699.04 (71.1%)

pays 5¼% annual interest would have an annual yield of 5.39% if it compounds the interest daily, providing the interest is allowed to accumulate and the principle is untouched for a year.

Of course, this is only 14 cents on $100, but every cent counts.

A factor that may be important in your savings account is how often you can withdraw funds without penalty. Some institutions allow a certain number of withdrawals each month or each quarter. Beyond that, they may assess a service charge, usually around 50 cents, for each withdrawal.

Some institutions do this to discourage customers from using an interest-paying savings account as a checking account.

Most banks and savings institutions print brochures or information sheets to explain their savings policies.

If you still have questions, ask an officer of the institution. If you get evasive or incomplete answers be leery of putting your money to work there.

Time can be your slave, specialists say

By Gene Kelly

A workaholic allows time to become his master.

It could just as easily be his slave.

In his book "Getting Things Done," management consultant Edwin C. Bliss says the idea that everyone needs eight hours of sleep daily is pure myth.

Why not, he suggests, sleep only six hours each work day and capture an extra 40 hours each month? You could start your own business, write that novel, finish college and dozens of other things you might never get around to.

What would you gain? Oh, about 10 extra years, over a lifetime. If you could get by on seven hours sleep, you would gain at least five years.

Bliss recognizes it's how you manage this time that's important.

In another recent book, "The Economics of Being a Woman," by Dee Dee Ahern with Betsy Bliss, are these dramatic examples of the "high cost of overlooking or losing time..."

If you put aside $125 a month or $1,500 a year, at 7½% compounded continuously (7.9% annual yield), for only 10 years:

Deposit from ages	By age 65 you will have accumulated
0-10	$1,528,290
10-20	714,482
20-30	334,023
30-40	156,157
40-50	73,004
50-60	34,129
60-65 (5 years only)	9,476

How much would you have if you deposited this amount annually? Add the dollar balance of the years until age 65.

In the first example, parents who put $1,500 a year aside for only a decade in a child's name ($15,000 in all) would make him a millionaire at age 65. The tabulations do not take taxes into account.

An employee who is eligible to set up an IRA and who has an unemployed spouse may set up separate or equal accounts, or one account with equal subaccounts. A total of 15% of earned income, or $1,750, whichever is less, may be contributed to the accounts and deducted from gross income each year.

IRA

A TAX-SHELTERED INVESTMENT.

If you're a wage earner not already covered by a qualified pension or profit-sharing plan, an Individual Retirement Account will make it possible for you to start your own.

An IRA is a special type of account that allows you to save a certain amount each year, depending on your income, for retirement.

For example, if you save $50.00 a month for one year, you'll have saved $600.00. In thirty years you will have $18,000. However, during that time First Federal is paying interest that will amount to over $53,000.00, giving you a total in your account of more than $71,000.00.

Upon retirement, or at age 59½, your funds become available to you. You may then receive a monthly check for $675.00 for 15 years. This means that your monthly investment of $50.00 results in a return of $121,000.00.

Under the IRA plan, Federal law allows you to contribute a maximum of $1,500.00 each year to your account, or 15% of your wages, whichever is less.

Effective January 1, 1977, wage earners who qualify for an IRA account may contribute up to $1,750.00 a year if their spouse is not employed. The $1,750.00 contribution cannot exceed 15% of the wage earner's yearly earned income.

Your IRA savings are 100% deductible from the gross income on your Federal income tax return. [Even if you don't itemize deductions.] It can save you up to $875 on your state and federal income taxes.

IRA accounts are federally regulated, so most features of any plan are identical. If you are comparing IRA plans you should look for:

1. Any fee or maintenance charge
2. Interest rate
3. Minimum deposit
4. Service

The First Federal Lincoln IRA plan has no fee of any type and currently pays a maximum of 7.75% interest after an initial deposit of $20.00 is made. Each of our offices has an IRA counselor for quick and accurate service or information.

Invest in your future today. See our qualified IRA counselor at the First Federal Lincoln office nearest you.

Antiquities can be alternative to stock and bond investments

(c) New York Times

New York — For investors seeking to cash in on the energy plan, there's an intriguing alternative to stocks and bonds.

Since the Arab oil embargo of 1973, the market in Middle East antiquities and early Islamic art has turned bullish after lying dormant for decades. Ancient art is now the fastest-growing category in dollar volume at Sotheby Parke Bernet here, reports John L. Marion, president. In the 1970-71 season, he said, it was the second worst.

Antiquities, with sales volume totaling $2.7 million in the 1975-76 season at the Madison Avenue auction house, are in sixth place out of 20 categories, well ahead of such popular collectibles as Georgian silver, French and Chinese porcelains and American furnishings.

In fact, if the momentum in this segment of the auction market continues, sales of ancient art may soon surpass those of French 19th-century and Old Master paintings, each of which totaled only about $100,000 more than antiquities sales last season.

Sotheby's estimates that, when the current season ends in June, sales will be up at least 15%. For there is one major sale to go — an auction on May 21 that offers not one or two prized Egyptian bronze cats, but more than 20 superb feline specimens and a host of other rarities. The cat, sacred in ancient Egypt, is one of the most coveted art objects today.

The rising popularity of antiquities collecting has many causes. But the primary reasons for the current interest are the public focus on the oil-rich Middle East; the much publicized redesign of the Egyptian Wing of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the museum's related offerings of sheets and jewelry boasting Egyptian motifs; and the stunning success of the traveling King Tutankhamen show in its first stop which ended last month at Washington's National Gallery.

"There's been as much as a six-fold increase in prices on Egyptian and early Islamic art in a decade," reported Richard M. Keresey, Sotheby's antiquities expert here. For example, he said a jewel-like 5,000-year-old Egyptian amethyst vase was sold in telephone bidding to the Berlin Museum for $32,000 at Sotheby's December auction. The former owner had purchased the treasure for $5,000 in the mid-1960s.

Not all profits are that impressive. And despite the escalation in prices, antiquities at auction and in dealers' galleries are well within the reach of most collectors able to spend from $500 to $1,000 — whereas Pop Art made yesterday has soared to astronomical levels.

Less spectacular increases were registered on the more moderately priced wares in the December sale. A green faience (ceramic) Egyptian scarab — the size of a postage stamp — brought $550, up from $190, the price it had fetched at a 1971 Sotheby's sale.

There were even less costly purchases, including a one-centimeter Egyptian seal for $90. Astute collectors and the dealers who continue to dominate the bidding (representing, it is reported, Italian industrialists and other Europeans as well as buyers from throughout this country and the Middle East) also were able to make excellent buys of Iranian pots and bronzes.

Individual Retirement Accounts: save for the future

By Bob Reeves

You can't have your tax-sheltered cake and eat it too, but you can put it in the freezer to eat later.

This is roughly the principle behind Individual Retirement Accounts (IRA's) — investment plans which allow a person to deduct as much as 15% from taxable income while putting that money to work for the future.

The Employment Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 made IRA's possible while stiffening federal requirements on pension plans provided by employers.

IRA's may be established only by persons not covered by a company pension plan. Since the act went into effect, an estimated 10,000 companies across the country have terminated their pension plans and encouraged their employees to set up IRA's instead, according to a recent survey for the Savings and Loan News.

Banks and savings and loan associations, which handle about two-thirds of the IRA market, report that IRA's have become big business since 1975.

You may contribute to an IRA account — and deduct on your tax return — up to $1,500 or 15% of your yearly earnings, whichever is less.

The law also permits putting 50% of an IRA in the name of an unemployed spouse, with a maximum of $1,750, or $850 apiece annually.

The money in the account may be used to buy certificates of deposit at banks or savings institutions, shares in a mutual fund, an annuity from an insurance company or government retirement bonds.

The interest or dividends also are not subject to taxes, so long as no money is withdrawn from the account. Any withdrawal before age 59½ is subject to a 10% penalty.

You may begin taking money out of the account at age 59½, and must begin by age 70½. The amount you are required to withdraw after age 70½ is based on your life expectancy. (A male at age 70 has a life expectancy of 12 years; he must withdraw one-twelfth of the total remaining in the account during the year following his 70th birthday). You pay taxes only on the amounts withdrawn.

As of March 1976, a Federal Reserve study showed that of an estimated $2 billion invested in IRA's nationwide, 37% was in savings associations, 25% in commercial banks, 21% with life insurance companies, 13% in mutual savings banks, and 4% in mutual funds and treasury bonds.

Banks and savings associations are the most popular, apparently because they offer relatively high interest at low risk. Also, as one local bank official noted, they advertise their plans more extensively than the government or investment brokers.

In local banks, the highest-yielding certificate of deposit pays 7½%. A similar certificate at a savings and loan pays 7¼%.

But will interest rates remain this high? "The chances of interest rates going down are minimal," said Jeff O'Donnell, an officer with State Federal Savings. The chances of interest rates going higher are good, several bankers agreed.

With a mutual fund, the chances for growth are even greater, but you assume the risk inherent in the stock market. Earnings from mutual funds have averaged 9% a year for the past 25 years, and are expected to average 12% over the next 25, according to Lincoln investment counselor Don Geis.

Government retirement bonds are unpopular because they earn only 6% interest, and they stop earning when you reach age 70½.

Annuities through insurance companies have the added feature of guaranteed yield.

A typical variable annuity guarantees a 7½% growth for the next four, and 3½% thereafter.

A variable annuity normally yields much higher (in the vicinity of 8 or 9%) by being "wrapped around" stock and bond funds.

Besides this, annuities give the policyholder the option of receiving guaranteed monthly payments for life, even if he outlives the amount of his nestegg.

The disadvantage with both mutual funds and annuities is that brokers fees and insurance premiums are included in the cost.

The tax breaks vary according to your bracket, but they can be considerable. At an assumed tax rate of 25%, you would be paying $375 a year on the $1,500 you're putting into your IRA.

Even at low interest rates, it makes good sense to put it in a tax-sheltered account, if you're eligible.

CDs offer more customer profits

Ever wonder why most of the new services offered by financial institutions — like telephone transfer of dollars and bill paying by phone — are linked to passbook accounts?

If the institutions can persuade you to keep your savings invested at passbook rates, rather than certificates of deposit (CDs), it lowers their cost of money. That means more profits for them.

You may decide that such services, convenience, savings flexibility and better financial records are worth the difference. The difference? Up to 2% less than some CDs pay.

Facts about IRA's

- Under the IRA plan, federal law allows you to contribute up to $1,500 or 15% of your wages, whichever is less, each year to your account.

- IRA savings are 100% deductible from the gross income on your federal income tax return, even if you don't itemize deductions.

The Federal Reserve Board recently eliminated the interest rate edge which the savings and loan industry had benefitted from in Keogh Plan and Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs).

The Fed's rule, to take affect July 1, will allow its member banks to offer both IRAs and Keogh accounts with no minimum deposit, three-year maturities and an interest rate of 7.75% — matching the highest rate S&Ls are permitted to pay on such accounts.

- The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) has adopted new rules allowing all insured banks supervised by the FDIC to pay up to 7¾% interest each year on IRA and Keogh deposits.

The deposits must have a maturity of three years or more but no minimum amount is required. The rules go into effect July 6, 1977.

- If you start an IRA at age 40 for retirement at age 65, and if you put away the maximum of $1,500 per year, in 25 years you will have invested $37,500.

If the interest rates remained static (7½% in local banks, 7¼% at a local savings and loan), at the end of the 25 years the $37,500 would amount to $116,605.97 with a bank and $119,504.16 with a savings and loan.

- Under tax legislation passed in 1976, the spouse who does not hold a paying job now has the same chance as the employed spouse to set up an IRA.

An employee who is eligible to set up an IRA and who has an unemployed spouse may chose separate or equal accounts or one account with equal subaccounts. A total of 15% of earned income, or $1,750, whichever is less, may be contributed to the accounts and deducted from gross income each year.

IRAs work for you and the economy

The $1,500 a year you invest in an IRA provides for your own future while making money available to others.

A savings and loan association, for example, depends on depositors to supply the working capital for home loans, home improvement loans, mobile home loans and student loans.

While you're earning 7¼% on your IRA funds, the association may be loaning your money out at 8¼% to homebuyers, or at as high as 12% for home improvement loans.

When you retire, and begin to draw out that monthly income, you can feel an extra twinge of pride, perhaps, when you consider how many times your money has turned over in the economy.

Your $125 a month, which you can virtually pretend you never earned — since it is deducted from your income at tax time — may have helped put someone's son or daughter through college, helped finance your neighbor's new roof, or contributed toward the purchase of someone's home.

You've helped bolster the economy, provide jobs and raise property values. A student loan usually helps boost a person's earning power.

And to top it off, you've provided for your own security.

Keep your nest egg from scrambling you

By Linda Ulrich

Trying to decide how you'll build your nest egg can make you feel pretty scrambled.

Keith Broman, chairman of the finance department in the University of Nebraska-Lincoln College of Business Administration, thinks it wise to consider three points before entering what is traditionally called the investment field:

- A regular savings program should be encouraged. "Savings accounts offer liquidity, a return and great safety."

- The family unit should be adequately insured.

- Determine whether renting or owning a home is preferable. "In the post-war (WW II) period, home ownership has been as satisfying an investment as any," Broman said.

The range of potential investments is broad.

Passbook savings accounts pay up to 5½%, certificates of deposit can offer a return of more than 7¼% if compounded. Generally, the longer the money is deposited, the higher the interest rate.

Real estate can appreciate and be a good investment.

However, Broman notes, for the small investor, land alone is a relatively impractical investment. The exception is a growing family considering the possibility of investing in a building lot for its next home.

Antiques, art objects and other collections are enticing investment alternatives for some people. But, Broman said, the layman may not have sufficient knowledge to make wise decisions.

"Investments in collector's plates, stamps, coins and the like make sense only if the person really is a collector and receives gratification through acquisition of such objects," he said.

In terms of security investments, bonds are a fixed income investment, while stocks are an equity investment.

A bond offers a regular return, "which today is large, relative to history but somewhat lower than the recent past when interest rates were very high," Broman said. "Bond return is subject directly to inflation, and there's no compensation for inflation through market price appreciation."

But safety in the investment, in the three highest grades of bonds, is there.

Dividends on stocks, on the other hand, usually provide a smaller annual return than the interest on bonds. The market value of stock can go up or down, of course.

Historically, Broman said, exhaustive studies have shown the average annual return on stocks is slightly less than 10% a year.

Since 1966, though, the price performance of common stock has been very flat and has included three significant declines.

"What does that mean for the future? No one can say with authority," Broman said. "Whereas for many years common stocks were regarded as a hedge against inflation, the evidence of the last decade suggests common stock performance is impaired in periods of greater than average inflation."

It is important to recognize there is a whole spectrum of risk in securities investment, he added, and an investor, particularly a young investor, may prefer a combination of stocks and bonds.

There also are hybrids such as convertible bonds which have some attributes of both the very safe and the very risky.

Add to all this a set of "ifs" which he says will influence securities investments: "if the public's uncertainty about the government, energy and the environment is satisfied; if the energy package has enough teeth to awaken the American people but is not so harsh it dismays them; and if a recognition develops that the President is indeed concerned about inflation . . . this will be a big plus for the stock market."

Choosing an estate executor

Choosing a friend or relative as executor of your will for sentimental reasons can mean loss of money to the estate and endless time in probate. Family frictions are another possible result.

Action for Independent Maturity (AIM), a national nonprofit organization for senior citizens, warns that you're not doing a friend or relative a favor by appointing him or her as executor.

AIM advises naming a bank or a lawyer.

When choosing an executor, keep in mind:

- The specialist's knowledge can help prevent unnecessary losses to the estate, such as penalties, possible litigation and bothersome delays that result from late filing.

- Most legal work on the estate must be done during legal business hours.

- The permanence of your executor is important. Your estate will suffer if its manager moves to another state.

- If you're not willing to put your estate entirely in the hands of professionals, consider naming a friend or relative as co-executor. They can have a hand in settling the estate, or decline and let the bank or lawyer handle matters.

Views on housing starts reflect confusing economic outlook

By John Cunruff

New York (AP) — On the same day that a respected housing economist was saying that single-family housing starts this year could reach a record 1.4 million, a man who monitors consumer moods was declaring things very, very bad.

That's how the economic outlook appears at the moment, at least as depicted by those who are regulars in the business of looking ahead. There is a split. The reports are contradictory, often unclear and sometimes confusing.

For reasons that don't explain themselves very clearly, some students of economic matters have begun marking down the anticipated advance of 1977, while others seem unswayed by the challenge presented in President Carter's energy message.

Kenneth Thygeson, chief economist of the U.S. League of Savings Associations, states that the housing industry is now well into what should be its best year since the boom days of the early 1970s.

Simultaneously, Albert Sindlinger comments that his company's measure of consumer attitudes, based on current and expected household money supply, took its biggest one-week drop ever, bigger even than that following imposition of the Arab oil embargo.

In Thygeson's view, Americans know their minds. They want single-family houses and they're prepared to buy and finance them with savings and easy terms. The supply of mortgage money is not just plentiful; it's abundant.

Sindlinger, however, says "This is a nation of confused people," following President Carter's energy message. We're being asked to sacrifice, he said, when that's what we've done for years. We're being told to conserve, he said, while we see government waste.

While Thygeson sees Americans expressing their confidence by committing themselves to the biggest purchases most of them will ever make, Sindlinger interprets such plans as a lack of confidence.

Listening to some of the more than 1,100 telephone interviews a week his firm conducts, Sindlinger observes: "They're buying houses for the same reason people used to buy gold."

Gold, he explained, is the last refuge of many people around the world who expect poor political or economic times. Americans are a bit different, he said. Their gold, their repository of value, is a house. A house has utility.

And if it isn't a house, he continued, it's a car, a big car, because big cars might be in short supply some day and therefore might command a fairly good price, energy shortage and taxes notwithstanding.

While Thygeson says the typical family's desire to purchase a home has been "apparently unaffected by rising home prices and related energy problems," Sindlinger says it has been affected to a remarkable degree.

Just prior to the Arab oil embargo, Sindlinger's index of confidence stood at 66. Sixty-six per cent of households possessed confidence about the present and future economy. Soon after the embargo it was down to 52.4.

That decline, over a two-week period, amounted to 13.6 points, made up of weekly totals of 6.3 and 7.3 points. But, in the week ended this past April 13, the index fell 9.7

points as news of the energy challenge leaked from the White House. And in the week that followed, another big decline was expected.

As of April 13, the Sindlinger level of current and expected household money supply, commonly called consumer confidence, was down to 44.3%, or 20 points below the level that suggests an upcoming recession.

Thygeson and Sindlinger aren't unique. They are chosen only because they represent views that are shared by many others in the business of measuring the economy's strength, present and future.

Because they seem to be poles apart, and are joined by hundreds of their colleagues at those poles, there does indeed seem to be some collective confusion about the future.

Bringing them together at the positive pole seems to be still another challenge for President Carter, one in which he apparently could succeed.

As Sindlinger observes, the decline in confidence relates to the economy, not to Carter. He seems to be holding his own, Sindlinger said.

Life insurance at record high

Life insurance has reached an all-time high — $201,740,000 — in Lancaster County.

Nationally, Americans now have $2,140 billion worth of life insurance, according to the U.S. Commerce Dept. Nebraska residents account for about $16.5 billion of this. (In 1970 that figure was $10.1 billion.)

In Lancaster County, the amount of life insurance in force amounts to about $30.720 per family. The national average is $28,100 per family; in Nebraska, it's $29,700.

When it's all said and done, financial security . . . your financial security . . . is what Lincoln Federal is all about

It's a peculiar fact of life in America that real reasons — the forces that motivate us all — often become obscured in the daily rush.

Every now and then, it's good to stop and remind ourselves what we're all about.

Like the headline, above.

Yes, it's true Lincoln Federal gives gifts for saving here. We make quite a lot of noise about that in our advertisements. The gift is like getting a baker's dozen. A little extra . . . a freebie. You like to receive them . . . we like to give them.

And, we'll continue offering our baker's dozen. But, above all, we thought it time to reaffirm why we're really here.

We're here to see to your financial security. With rock solid reserves and interest rates. Prudent advice and counsel. Federally insured accounts. Plus personal service . . . and more . . . and more.

Capital gains, capital losses, the IRS and you

By Richard Paxson

Most Americans are reasonably familiar with how their income is taxed. The federal government's share is based on the amount of income, less deductions.

Salaries and wages are the only sources of income for many people. Even for those who have a stable investment in the stock market, taxation is simple. Dividends are treated much like salaries and wages in determining an adjusted income on which tax is based.

But the more active investor, one who intends to buy and sell stocks, bonds and real estate perhaps several times in a tax year, should know a lot about how the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) treats capital gains and losses.

Simply stated, a capital gain is an increase in value of an asset before the investor sells or otherwise disposes of it. It's taxable profit to you.

A capital loss is a decrease in value, a loss to you that can be deducted in determining your tax.

There are short-term and long-term capital gains and losses.

For transactions in 1977, a capital asset must be held more than nine months for treatment as a long-term capital gain or loss. After 1977, property must be held more than one year for this treatment.

In previous years, property had to be owned for longer than six months to qualify as long-term.

Long- and short-term capital gains and losses are taxed differently. Taxes are due on just one-half of long-term gains, but on 100% of short-term gains.

Short-term losses can be deducted from your taxable income, dollar for dollar, but only 50% of long-term losses can be used to reduce taxable income.

The deduction for capital losses is limited. For 1977, the maximum amount that can be deducted was increased from $1,000 to $2,000. After this year, the limit will be $3,000.

There's also a ceiling on how much long-term capital gains tax must be paid. The IRS provides an alternative way to figure tax on income that includes capital gains. The effect is to limit that tax to a maximum 25% of long-term gains.

One place where you may be able to avoid capital gains taxes completely is on investment in a home. If you sell your home and purchase a new home of equal or greater cost within an 18-month period, there is no tax on any profit you make on the sale. If you build a residence, the time period is two years.

If you are age 65 or older when you sell your home, and have owned and used the property as your principal residence for at least five of the past eight years, you can exclude part or all of the capital gain from your taxable income.

For sales in 1977 and thereafter, you can exclude the entire gain if the sale price is $35,000 or less. Part of the gain can be excluded if the price is higher. For sales made in 1976, the amount is $20,000.

Securities Exchange rule can help investors decide

A recent Securities Exchange Commission ruling may give stock market investors "a more realistic way to judge which companies are doing well within an industry and which industries get a better return on investment than others," MONEY magazine said in the January 1977 issue.

The ruling, effective this spring, requires all companies with physical assets over $100 million to disclose the cost of replacing their plants and inventories in today's inflated dollars, rather than value assets at their historic cost. This would, in effect, strip away inflation from reported earnings and show that real earnings are actually much lower for some companies. What this might do to stock prices, reports MONEY, "is anybody's guess — and everybody's worry."

The effect of replacement-cost accounting would make itself felt most heavily on the balance sheets of companies whose capital expenses are highest.

By John Birtwell

When the mutual funds that invest in tax-free municipal bonds came on the scene a few months ago, they were billed as a way for small investors to get tax breaks like the rich.

But despite promotion by more than a dozen mutual "muni funds" promising tax-exempt yields as high as 5 and 6%, neither Wall Street nor the small investor has apparently shown much enthusiasm so far.

Contacts with Lincoln brokerage houses indicate a mixed reception for the new funds. A spokesman at Dain Kalman & Quail said brokers still are leaning towards the more traditional bond packages: "Mini funds haven't really caught on, since we can often do better yield-wise for our clients."

At First Mid America, however, a staff member observed, "They have gone well; some of our people like them."

The new municipal funds operate much like mutual funds for stocks, except their portfolio consists of bonds issued by states, cities and public authorities. The funds are professionally managed to reduce losses, make gains and earn the highest level of interest.

Until the new law was passed, most small investors were forced to turn to so-called "unit investment trusts" as the only way to participate in a tax-exempt diverse portfolio. Most of the unit trusts required a minimum investment of $5,000, paying a set interest rate over a fixed period.

Any attempt to sell the bonds in a unit trust usually meant doing so at a loss. Not so with the new muni-funds, according to their promoters, who say low investment requirements and flexibility in turnover should mean cash benefits for large and small investors.

Theoretically at least, small investors can join in a muni-fund for as little as $100; the usual minimum investment runs somewhere between $1,000 and $2,500.

However, some municipal fund backers acknowledge that the small investor, with perhaps only $1,000 to invest, may be better off with more suitable taxable investments.

On the plus side, backers say the flexibility in the fund's portfolio should allow managed funds to grow according to changes in the market.

On the debit side, investors must rely on the management ability of the fund — in a field short on experience of proven track record. And the success of any fund still depends greatly on the quality of the fund portfolio. As investment picks up, so should competition for scarce high-grade bonds.

Lastly, some funds opt for sales charges and/or management fees that may reduce the effective yield of the investor. Both plans may cost the investor as much as 1½% a year, although so far the norm has been under 1%.

Potential investors should take all three factors into account before deciding on muni-funds.

Still, while conservative investors may choose the less-flexible but assured income route, a wise investment in a muni-fund may yield the desired added interest edge.

Financial jargon often clutters retirement portfolios

By Richard Paxson
"Tax-sheltered annuities."

That bit of financial jargon usually is enough to strike confusion into the minds of most middle-income Americans who want to put a few dollars away for retirement.

Today the most publicized alternatives for saving are the Individual Retirement Account and Keogh plans. But they are available only to persons without government or company pension plans. Moreover, some new variations on the old-fashioned annuity provide more flexibility.

At first look, the standard annuity might seem to be not much different than a savings account: you invest a fixed amount each month or in a lump sum, it draws interest and it can be withdrawn later in monthly payments or as a lump sum.

Uncle Sam makes the big difference, because he provides a special tax shelter for annuities. The money invested earns untaxed income, the income is added to the principal and earns more untaxed income.

The government gets its share when the investment is returned, most often at retirement. The big advantage is that most people are earning less during retirement than during their working years, and so they are in a lower income tax bracket. There's no tax up to the original amount invested, and the interest income is taxed at a lower rate than when it was earned.

Keep in mind that the principal invested already was taxed once, probably through the income tax when it was paid as wages or salary, so annuities are not perfect tax shelters. Payments on an annuity can be withheld from your wages or salary, if your employer agrees.

Insurance companies developed these annuities.

The Lincoln Education Assn. surveyed for their members, the plans offered by 23 insurance companies with offices in Lincoln. Information on seven of those annuities is included in the accompanying chart.

The seven were chosen because they illustrate some important differences among available annuities. The companies are not identified because some details may have changed since the study was completed in mid-1976.

When shopping around and comparing annuities, the first thing to look for is a guaranteed interest rate. That's the minimum rate of interest the company agrees to pay as long as you have money in their plan.

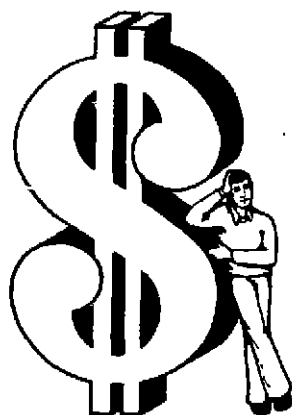

Some annuities guarantee as much as 6½%, but that's only in the first year of investment and declines thereafter. Most have a guaranteed rate of about 3%. That rate obviously determines how much money will be available for return to the investor when payments begin.

Consider, for example, an annuity in which $100 a month is deposited for 20 years. Of the 23 companies, the one paying the highest interest rate (6½% declining to 4%) would pay the investor $35,405 at the end of the twentieth year. The company with the lowest rate (3%) would pay some $6,300 less.

In order to stay more competitive in the investment market, insurance companies actually pay higher rates than guaranteed. The highest current rate in the survey was 8%, yielding $55,498 in 20 years. The lowest rate, 6%, accrues to about $12,000 less.

The amount companies charge for servicing your account varies widely. One charged 54¢ of every dollar invested in the first two years for company expenses. Another charged nothing. Most charge a percentage of your investment, plus a fixed fee.

Generally, the investor can withdraw any part of the annuity early and as often as he wants with no penalty. A few companies reserve the right to delay withdrawals up to six months following a request. Some set the minimum age for the annuity to begin at 50 or 55, and some set the maximum age to begin at 70 or 75. Minimum annual deposits are from $25 to $600.

Which annuity is best? Unfortunately, none is a clear winner. The plan with the highest guaranteed rate may not have the highest current rate or the lowest fees. Only comparison shopping can answer the question for each investor.

Three other types of annuities have been developed recently. The so-called "deferred annuity" usually is purchased in a minimum lump sum of $1,000. They are well suited for investing an inheritance so that it will provide a retirement income. Interest rates are higher, typically a guaranteed 7%.

An Internal Revenue Service (IRS) ruling last month has cast a cloud over "savings annuities" and "investment annuities."

Savings annuities usually are purchased in lump sums of $30,000 or more. Fixed company fees are higher and can be prohibitive on smaller amounts. Insurance companies use the money to purchase savings certificates, usually in savings and loan associations. The company holds the certificates, but the investor retains control of them. The principal can't be withdrawn until the certificates mature.

The IRS ruled in March that investments in savings annuities will not be tax sheltered if the investor maintains control of how they are invested. A group of California insurance companies has organized to fight the decision.

The controversy could affect the desirability of investment annuities. They are similar to savings annuities, but the investor can choose to put the money in corporate bonds and stocks, as well as certificates of deposit. Investment annuities are for people with at least $10,000 for a minimum portfolio which they're managing themselves.

Educator: 'perks' essential to execs

New York (AP) — At a time when many investors and others resent the cars and planes and other perquisites of top corporate officers, Courtney Brown would have us look at the side of the coin that is seldom face up.

Brown would surround the top man, the chairman or president, with as many conveniences as are necessary to keep him mentally and physically fit, and working productively instead of being mired in extraneous details.

"Instead of saying these emoluments are totally uncalled for, I say they are utterly essential," said Brown, who has held high positions in business, government and academe, and who is now chairman of the American Assembly, which holds nonpartisan discussions to illuminate issues of U.S. policy.

"Is it proper for high corporate officials to enjoy such benefits as big cars, private jets and apartments, all paid for by investors? Brown was asked.

He answered that it was proper. "I've concluded that the corporate chief executives are the hardest working group and the least protected," he said.

"There is nobody to tell them when to stop. They love their jobs and the jobs make such demands that they can burn themselves out and not last as long in business as the board wants them to."

In the newspapers the day before were stories about the chief executives of General Motors and Ford receiving close to $1 million in salaries and bonuses for 1976.

Such incomes "create an extremely bad impression and are quite uncalled for," said Brown. "They do a vast amount of damage to the morale of the guy at a desk earning $20,000, with a wife and kids, trying to make a go of it."

Market luring retirement dollars Social responsibility is 'in self-interest'

By Joe Hudson

Are you enough of a gambler to cast the fate of your retirement dollars to the whims of the stock market?

Although many brokers, bankers and insurance agents discourage it, a few Lincoln-area persons are doing just that with their Keogh retirement accounts.

Under the Keogh plan, self-employed individuals may set aside 15% of their income, up to $7,500 annually, for retirement.

The money can be put in savings certificates, insurance annuities, mutual funds, or stocks and bonds.

The contributions are tax-free, as are any gains the fund may achieve through interest and dividends. As money is withdrawn from the fund after age 59½, it is taxed as regular income, but the individual usually is in a lower tax bracket by then.

Grand Island physical therapist Lynn Rathjen has $6,000 in Keogh funds invested in stocks and bonds, and so far the gamble has paid off.

Although he has not contributed to the fund for a year and a half, the fund has grown to $9,000, he said.

The two stocks — a utility and an over-the-counter security — are blue-chippers which he has been holding since the fund started.

"The stock I have now happens to have gone up, so I've been holding onto it," Rathjen said. "I may trade more in the future. If I thought there were companies that might go up real fast, I might trade now."

Rathjen, who said he considers the markets a sort of hobby, said he doesn't worry about his fund hitting rock-bottom.

"If it were savings for next summer's vacation, I'd worry," he said. "But I figure if it goes down, eventually it will rise again."

Lincoln brokers generally frown on putting Keogh funds in stocks and bonds.

"The money's too damn important and serious" to let the individual manage it in the stock market, said Harry Ware, manager of Kalman Dain, & Quail Inc. Instead, he encourages investors to put their retirement money in stock or bond mutual funds.

A Lincoln doctor who also started a Keogh account a year and a half ago has seen his mutual fund rise in value "about 11% on interest alone" to roughly $10,000.

He said the fund, managed by a Lincoln bank, is "a very stable investment — not the type of thing that's going to drop right out of the market."

"I'm confident the fund is the right way to go," he said. Nationally, people seem to agree, as about 42% of the Keogh market is in mutual funds; according to the Federal Reserve Board.

For those who don't trust the stock market, insurance annuities and savings certificates provide a safer, more conservative route, but the money still accumulates quickly.

Annuities currently have about a 7¼% yield, Ware said. Nationally, about a third of Keogh funds are invested in insurance, Fed. statistics show.

The purchase of a $7,500 saving certificate each year would pile up to $758,000 in a Keogh account after 30 years, at 7% interest. That total is almost triple the $225,000 actually contributed by the individual.

Lincoln investment managers say the Keogh plan is most popular with farmers and professional people. Participation in Keogh is steady, but not rising, they say.

"Many people who can take advantage of IRA (Individual Retirement Account) have done so," because of a requirement that Keogh account holders also contribute for employees who have worked for them more than three years, one broker said.

"Most of the people on Keogh are the ones with very few — if any — employees," he noted.

'Sliding payment' plan costs more

Should you look seriously at the "sliding payment" plan, one variation of the traditional mortgage? Limited use has been authorized by the U.S. Housing and Urban Affairs Dept.

It calls the payments of $223 a month the first year on a $35,000 mortgage at 8.5%. The payments would rise 3% a year until the 11th year when it would level off at $300 for the next 20 years.

On the standard fixed-rate mortgage, the payment would be $269, with the borrower ultimately repaying a total of $96,840.

If even that total jolts you, the sliding payment concept would force you to repay a total of $102,768. That's a good $5,000 more!

Tax reference

The new telephone bill paying systems could become an invaluable income tax reference for you.

Most provide monthly and year-end recaps of payments.

Chicago — Stanley G. Karson had nothing to sell. He is in the insurance business, but he isn't a salesman.

Karson is a specialist in corporate social responsibility... which alone would be enough to cause Milton Friedman to have conniption fits. Economist Friedman doesn't believe that corporations have social responsibilities. He believes that everything a corporation does should be profit motivated.

"I tell corporations and consumers the same thing," Karson asserted. "That corporate social responsibility is a matter of self-interest. Corporations should be interested in community affairs because you cannot divorce the health of the corporation from the health of the community."

Karson is the director of the New York-based Clearinghouse on Corporate Social Responsibility, which counsels some 450 insurance company members on issues and activities in the field of social responsibility.

While many major corporations recognize that they have social responsibilities, no other industry is probably as organized as the insurance business. This is the case even though the insurance industry doesn't face some of the sticky pollution problems that many manufacturing companies do.

Karson is able to tick off six specific target areas that the insurance industry is interested in. In no particular order, they are:

Community projects; corporate contributions; individual involvement (which includes everything from the loaning of executives to community organizations to encouraging employees to participate in local activities); social investments (investment of funds in projects such as low-income housing or minority enterprises); equal employment opportunities for women and minority members; environment and energy conservation.

Karson enumerated several specific areas in which insurance companies are starting to move. One is the "re-evaluation of contribution policies," because many charitable contributions are based on the whims of the company founder rather than on more urgent and current community needs.

Insurance companies also are looking at the risk factors regarding the insuring of women and handicapped persons.

12X Investors willing to take risks with industrial banks

By Gene Kelly

Investors seem increasingly willing to sacrifice some sense of security these days, if the rate of return looks good enough.

How else can you explain the surprising asset growth of Nebraska industrial loan and investment companies?

Last year these so-called "industrial banks" were, by far, the fastest-growing segment of state chartered financial institutions, in spite of the fact that their savings accounts are not insured.

On top of this, industrial banks are allowed to make consumer and commercial loans that other lenders would reject. Much of the lending is based on second mortgages.

Yet resources of the 14 Nebraska industrial banks increased $82.4 million during 1976 — reaching a total of $172.8 million, according to William Riley, director of banking and finance.

Insured accounts aren't nearly as important as the track record of industrial banks, says S. E. Copple of Lincoln president of The Commonwealth Company. "Nationally and in Nebraska, the industrials have an enviable record — one that's a hell of a lot better than the commercial banks."

"Why, even when Roosevelt closed the banks in 1933, he could find no reason to require industrial banks to insure accounts," he added.

Competition, not statutes, controls the interest rates that industrials pay on savings. In Nebraska most of them begin passbook accounts at 6 1/4% and range up to 8% on four-year certificates of deposit (CDs). If quarterly interest is left to compound, the yield increases (see chart on page 13).

In contrast, banks may pay up to 5% on passbook savings and 7 1/4% on four-year CDs, savings and loan associations may pay up to 5 1/4% on passbooks and 7 1/2% on certificates.

Those who borrow from an industrial bank generally use real estate as collateral, although a person's credit rating and other security often are factors.

Loans can run as long as 10 years, with most industrials charging 18% on the first $1,000 and 12% on any amount above that.

Three industrial banks were chartered during 1976 — one each in Omaha, Lincoln and Waverly, two auxiliary offices were approved in Omaha.

Two other industrials have been chartered since then, one in Norfolk, the other in Lincoln.

Applications also are pending for industrial banks in Gretna, Hastings and Grand Island, plus branches in a half-dozen cities.

The growth in both resources and number of banks are the result of statutes that are "probably too lenient," says Glenn Yaussi, chairman of NBC Co., a Lincoln holding company.

A commercial bank seeking a state charter is asked to prove — usually in a public hearing — that its operations would fill a public necessity and demand.

An industrial bank doesn't have to prove necessity. On that point, "William Riley (state banking director) has a hard time denying an industrial bank application," Yaussi said.

Glenn Yaussi

The industrial bank "fills a real void" between the commercial bank and the finance company, Yaussi contends.

At the end of 1976 NBC Co. owned three industrial banks. When Mutual Savings Co. of Lincoln was bought in 1972, it had a savings total of roughly $773,000, Yaussi notes. Today, its savings accounts total $16 million.

"It was a realistic way to compete with higher savings and loan interest rates," he explains.

Mutual Savings has its headquarters at 13th and K, plus branches at 48th and Vine Sts. and 40th and South.

It bought Nebraska Savings Co. of Scottsbluff in mid-1975 when it had a savings total of $2.5 million, it's now at $9 million.

Mutual Savings Co. of Omaha was chartered last December. Total assets now exceed $1 million, says James Stuart Jr., president of NBC Co.

This trio of industrial banks had a combined asset growth of 53% during 1976, ending the year with total assets of $27.6 million.

Stuart says the holding company plans continued growth in the industrial banking sector. "On April 1, we made application to the Federal Reserve Board to acquire the industrial bank charter and about $1 million in assets from the Fremont State Co."

Until NBC entered the field, only 10 small, family-owned industrial banks had operated in the state. Security capital to sustain growth was a problem, Yaussi says. An industrial bank must maintain, on a daily basis, $1 of capital for each $10 of savings placed with it.

This requirement periodically forces fast-growing industrial banks to offer capital notes to the public. The going interest rate is 9% yearly, with interest paid quarterly.

Yaussi stresses "this is equity capital, with notes issued for seven years or longer..."

S. E. Copple

"They're needed because the industrial bank can't make money fast enough to handle its growth in deposits."

The notes are being sold in multiples as small as $500. While the rate of return is attractive, capital notes are subordinate to other obligations, including those savings CDs.

An industrial bank that's part of a bank holding company has the advantage of name recognition when it comes to attracting deposits and equity capital.

The proliferation of industrial banks worries Yaussi. "Some of the smaller new ones may have problems," he says. "But for the good of all, I hope we don't see any go broke. That would hurt all the industrials."

There is no limit on the number of branches which an industrial bank could seek in the county where it's headquartered, the state banking department has the final say-so.

Commercial banks are limited to two branches within the city where the bank is located.

Savings and loan associations can branch all over the state, but must get regulatory approval.

Many of the industrial banks recently chartered in Nebraska have commercial bank connections. This isn't by chance, critics say, claiming it's just another way of establishing branches and circumventing the intent of branch-banking laws.

Yaussi says they aren't exactly wrong. "You could say we've gone that route, through the holding company we can branch that way. We find industrial banks fairly profitable. It's certainly one

Auto, health insurance

Most drivers and healthy folk can still get auto and major medical insurance, even though many companies recently have threatened to quit selling policies. All you need, says the April MONEY magazine, is to be lucky enough to live in the right place, to employ some simple strategies and be prepared to pay ever increasing premiums.

To keep the car insurance you do have, MONEY advises exercising care about who in your household drives. Parents could lose coverage if their children are chronic fender-benders, so it may be wise to exclude them from family coverage.

It's a mistake to file trivial claims, such as a claim that barely exceeds your deductible amount for collision coverage. If you're to blame for a minor accident, settle with the other driver directly, MONEY says, and avoid risking a surcharge or, worse, non-renewal of your policy.

Insurers themselves debate whether major-medical protection is readily available today. MONEY says "More and more companies are setting internal limits" in their policies. Instead of paying 75% or 80% of whatever hospital room and board may cost, for example, they now pay only a fixed amount.

Charitable groups are starting to promote 'investment blend'

(c) New York Times

New York — Shelter for capital gains, immediate tax deductions, a high yield of 7% or more and the psychic satisfaction of doing good are all part of an investment blend that more and more philanthropic organizations are beginning to promote.

Colleges and universities have been offering their benefactors high-yield pooled-income funds as a way of attracting donations for some time, but it is only recently that charitable groups have begun to pick up the ball.

At the moment, only a handful are running with it. They include the Young Women's Christian Assn., the Salvation Army, the National Audubon Society and the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center.

Many charitable organizations, of course, have been offering their supporters annuities for years in an exchange that trades a fixed-dollar income against a gift of capital that goes to the institution when the donor — or a beneficiary — dies. The YWCA's annuity program — according to Norma Boin, a consultant on fixed-income trusts to the corporation — is over 100 years old, for example.

Pooled-income funds, on the other hand, have become more popular than the old-line annuities because they offer higher yields as well as some sizable tax advantages.

These funds operate very much like commercial mutual funds in that they are open-end pools of capital. A donor shares in the earnings of the pool in direct proportion to the amount of money he puts into it.

All such funds concentrate on high current income. As an example, the Audubon Life Income Fund is yielding about 7.66% on the market value of its portfolio and about 8.01% on its book value, says Frances Breed, the fund's director of development.

Russell Prince, director of deferred giving for the Salvation Army, says that organization's pooled-income fund is returning 7%.

Most funds pay a return in the range of 7 to 8%. Their portfolios are weighted heavily with high yielding corporate bonds, sprinkled with a mixture of equally high-yielding utility stocks.

Because an investment in a charitable pooled-income fund is a contribution, it rates a tax reduction. The size of the deduction, determined through a complicated set of actuarial tables, varies with the donor's age and sex.

Thus, a man, 75, donating $10,000 to the Audubon Life Income Fund, according to Miss Breed, would be entitled to a $5,543 deduction spread over five years. But a woman, 75, because of her longer life expectancy, would be allowed a deduction of only $4,995 on a $10,000 contribution.

The deduction also varies with a fund's yield — the higher the return, the lower the deduction.

The deduction helps to shelter income payments made by the funds, which are taxable as ordinary income. One of the big talking points for the funds is the way they can be used to protect capital gains.

A donor fortunate enough to have bought IBM when it was $50, for example, can exchange his stock for participation in one of the funds at the current market value (about $270) without any tax on the gain, either to himself or subsequently to his estate.

To think twice in every matter and follow the lead of others is no way to make money.

Real estate investments are now 'sure winners'

By Jim Aucoin

Grab a map of Lincoln and, blindfolded, throw a dart at it. Whatever property gets stuck, buy it for 10% more than the market rate, give it a little time, then sell it for a big profit.

No, it's not a Chance card for Monopoly.

According to investor and real estate executive Lloyd Hinkley at Town and Country Realty, such a possibility is very real.

In fact, real estate investments have become such sure-winners, the market is crowded with people with a buck to invest.

Out of approximately 325 apartment complexes of 12 units or more in Lincoln, about 65 change hands each year.

"Real estate is the only inflation edge left," explained Ernest Clement, a broker and counselor with Commercial and Investment Realty Inc.

Within five to eight years, he said, most apartment real estate has a net return of 40 to 70%. "No CD (certificate of deposit) can touch it," he said.

But, he cautioned, it's not a trouble-free investment. Management problems, maintenance and high initial investment with low cash flow at first can take their toll.

Farm real estate, which has the potential for some of the highest initial returns, also saddles the investor with the highest risk.

All-in-all, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, the rate of return on farm real estate in recent years has exceeded, by a substantial margin, the rates of return on common stock.

Appreciation rates for farmland jumped during 1976, on the average, by a whopping 25%, says Roger Pearson. Such figures have generated a lot of interest in farm investment.

But, while some farmland might increase in value 50-60% the first year, "it could be possible for it not to make a dime," said Pearson, president of Commercial and Investment Realty.

"There are a lot of 'ifs,'" he stressed, including weather conditions, commodity price fluctuations and other unpredictable factors.

In rental property, the 'ifs' can be mitigated by caution, Clement said. "One of the best parts of real estate investment is that you can personally look at the apartments and examine the books."

That concreteness is bolstered by a near-certain inflation rate which tends to increase property values.

The question when you buy most property, such as an automobile, is "How much will it go down in value?" noted Hinkley. With houses, he said, it's: "How much will it appreciate?"

He guessed that the last time Lincoln property values went down was when the airbase closed in the mid-1960s. Looking ahead, "I can't see anything out there that will cause them to drop again," he said.

According to the Census Bureau, the national average cost of a new 1968 house was $25,000. Today, it's at least $47,000.

In the Midwest, the average cost of an existing house nine years ago was $19,000, according to the National Association of Realtors. In February 1977 that same house sold for about $38,000.

During the last three years, the rate of return on a house has been between 9 and 13%, Hinkley said. It used to be only 6%.

"The jump has made a lot of people financially secure," he said.

He explained that if someone invested $6,000 in common stock with a 10% return, after one year the investment will be worth $6,600.

However, he said, if the same $6,000 is invested in a house, the investment is leveraged. For example, if property values jump 10%, a $40,000 house will be worth $44,000 in a year. That means the investor might get back his original $6,000 investment plus $4,000 — a 66% return.

A major problem with that seemingly idyllic situation, though, is the scarcity of investment property in the $20,000 or less range, pointed out Clement colleague Sara Williamson.

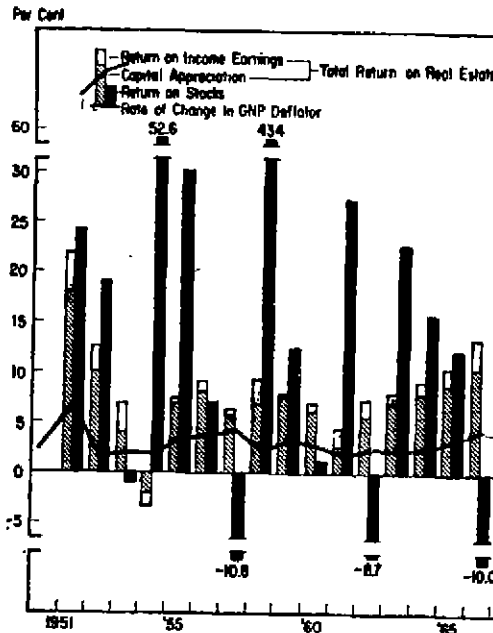

Buying rundown property, upgrading it and selling it for a 12 to 18% return is very popular in Lincoln. Consequently, the market for such property is tight.

When purchasing older property, Hinkley warned, it's important not to bumble into a house which needs more repairs than meets the eye. "What may have looked like no investment at all may end up being $2,500. When it comes to repairs, one thing leads to another."

Probably the most attractive aspect of real estate investment is the tax benefit. Many investors buy property simply to offset profits in other areas, Hinkley said. Initial low returns can provide a four or five-year shelter from the storm of income taxes.

Furthermore, property taxes and the interest on mortgage payments are deductible from federal income taxes. A 9% mortgage balanced by tax deductions of 1 or 2%, makes the true interest rate about 7%.

It's factors such as these which make that dream house a dream investment.

Home mortgage interest costs deductible at income tax time

If you buy a new home, you won't be particularly thrilled about paying roughly 8 3/4% interest on the mortgage.

But if you're like the average American family — with a taxable income of $12,000 to $16,000 — you'll actually have paid only 6 3/4%. Why?

Interest paid on a home mortgage is deductible for income tax purposes.

How much less depends entirely on the homeowner's taxable income. As this chart shows, the net mortgage cost is reduced as the taxable income increases. For example, a husband and wife filing a joint return and earning between $16,000 and $20,000 a year, paying 9% mortgage interest, would have a net interest cost of only 6 2/3%.

That same mortgage held by a couple filing jointly with taxable income between $24,000 and $28,000 would have a net cost of 5.44%.

In this era of rising living costs, it's nice to know that your home, while probably increasing in value, also provides you with a significant deduction for interest payments.

Split equity mortgages would benefit elderly homeowners

New York (AP) — A mortgage contract under which elderly homeowners can live off the value of their homes while retaining the right of lifetime occupancy is being backed by the nation's major home-lending group.

The innovation conceivably could provide tremendous social and financial benefits, because 70% of household heads over age 65 are homeowners, with a total equity of more than $80 billion.

At the same time, it is estimated that nearly two-thirds of elderly married couples who own their homes have less than desired incomes, and could benefit from obtaining annuities based on their home equity.

The total equity of such elderly homeowners is sufficient to provide annual annuities in excess of $5 billion.

Under the "split equity" plan, the homeowner is assured a home for life, but in the meantime obtains regular cash payments from the buyer. The latter is assured possession when the seller dies.

The concept, long utilized in France, was popularized earlier this year by Prof. Jack M. Guttentag of the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania, but had attracted little official endorsement.

However, John Hardin, the new president of the U.S. League of Savings Association, said, "We're not promoting it, but we're receptive to the chance to experiment."

"It isn't our main thrust but I like it," Hardin said. This year the league will make about 80% of all loans on single-family houses.

"We need to work out something to help older people in our society whose only alternative is to sell," said Hardin, president of the First Federal Savings and Loan Assn. of Rock Hill, S.C.

But he indicated that the present regulatory climate would tend to inhibit development of the idea.

He said the associations want flexibility to design mortgages to better fit the needs of borrowers but that the mood of Congress, which oversees the work of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (FHLBB), limits them to fixed-term mortgages.

The associations also seek to experiment with variable rate mortgages, with government-insured mortgages in "ring" neighborhoods on the edge of slums, and with mortgages designed specifically for young home-buyers.

"We hope the FHLBB would let us experiment for the benefit of borrowers and we're willing to live with it," Hardin said.

Variable-rate mortgages are now offered by some state-chartered associations, in California especially, but not by federally chartered institutions. Rates under such plans rise and fall with money-market prices.

The program to seek government aid in making loans in rundown but basically sound neighborhoods on the edge of slums is largely a promotion of the savings associations, which have been accused of redlining such areas.

Under their plan, which is now being considered by the House of Representatives, the federal government would co-insure loans in transitional areas on an 80-20 basis, with the greater risk assumed by government.

"It has gotten to the point where we couldn't ask associations to take the risk," said Hardin of these neighborhoods. But with government assistance, he said, the associations would push the program as they did the GI home insurance program after World War II.

Newspaper Assist to the Investor...

In order to make daily and Sunday stock market tables more meaningful to investors, The Lincoln Journal, The Lincoln Star and The Sunday Journal and Star have instituted a "composite" table of stock information reflecting activity on a nationwide basis.

The composite United Press International tables reflect trading in New York listed stocks on a nationwide basis and identify the market on which a published last price occurs.

Q. About Sen. Barry Goldwater—why didn't he do something to stamp out the corruption and crookedness in his own state, or did he insidiously find himself wrapped up in it?—H.T., Tucson, Ariz.

A. Goldwater and his brother Bob are members of the Arizona Establishment. Perhaps they were political innocents unmindful of the corruption which was developing in their state. Surely a man of Goldwater's character would not knowingly traffic with owners of massage parlors, crooked land speculators, and members of the underworld. Senator Goldwater may not be the most admired member of the U.S. Senate, but he is an honest man.

Q. Is it true that Laura Baugh earned $300,000 winning golf tournaments last year? If so, why haven't we heard more of this golf champion?—Fred Rickett, W. Palm Beach, Fla.

A. Laura Baugh, 21, of Del Ray Beach, Fla., earned approximately $29,000 in tournament prize money last year. A beautiful, photogenic young blonde, she earned about $250,000 appearing on TV commercials and other advertising vehicles. To date she has not won a professional tournament but, through the efforts of agent Mark McCormack, has made a fortune promoting various products. As an amateur, Laura won the U.S. amateur title in 1971.

LAURA BAUGH

Q. How does Zbigniew Brzezinski, head of the National Security Council, compare to Henry Kissinger? Is Zbig changing his name to Big Bear?—G.T., Cambridge, Mass.

A. Brzezinski is not changing his name. In contrast to Kissinger, he has much less power. From all appearances, Carter is very much his own foreign policy-maker. Under Gerald Ford it was Kissinger who pretty much made foreign policy.

Q. Is it true that President Jimmy Carter is considering a face-lift because of sagging jowls and a double chin and has sought the advice of Ronald Reagan on this question?—M.P., San Diego, Cal.

A. Carter is considering many problems, but a face-lift is not one of them.

Q. What is the true story about actress Sophia Loren and the Italian police authorities? Why don't they want her to leave Italy? Is she a smuggler?—G. Beckelt, Deal, N.J.

A. Sophia Loren, 42, and her husband Carlo Ponti, 62, became citizens of France in 1963 to avoid bigamy suits in Italy. Divorce was then illegal in Italy, and the Italians declined to regard as legal the divorce Ponti had obtained in Mexico in 1957. Thus, for a long while Ponti and Loren were regarded in Italy as living in sin.

When Loren and Ponti moved to Paris, Italian police suspected that they might be transferring their assets to France, particularly large amounts of Italian currency, which is illegal.

This past March when Sophia Loren was about to board a Paris-bound plane at Rome's Da Vinci Airport under an assumed name, the Finance Police, who enforce the Italian foreign exchange regulations, detained her. They recalled her luggage, searched it thoroughly, confiscated three large sealed envelopes which contained records of her various banking transactions and those involving her husband's "alleged currency violations."

After several hours of interrogation they permitted Miss Loren to catch a plane to Paris, where she was met by her husband.

In February of this year a dozen members of Rome's Finance Police raided the Ponti villa outside Rome, conducted a search for financial documents, and found some they considered relevant to their investigation.

Loren and Ponti were for years considered one of the wealthiest couples in Italy, and Italy seems determined to prevent them from removing all their assets. Sophia, her husband and their two sons may eventually move to Montreal or California.

SOPHIA LOREN ESCORTED BY ROME FINANCE OFFICER AFTER BEING DETAINED AT AIRPORT

Q. Is it a fact that the two leading Don Juans of the Carter Administration are Hamilton Jordan, Carter's former campaign manager, and Jody Powell, Carter's press secretary?—F.K., Bethesda, Md.

A. Jordan and Powell appreciate female beauty in all its forms, which is why each has an attractive wife.

MARK SPITZ AND WIFE SUSAN

Q. I understand there is no truth in the report Olympic swimmer Mark Spitz and his wife are separated. Am I right?—S.R., Los Angeles.

A. You are right.

Q. Anna Manahan of Charlottesville, Va.—has she ever been recognized as Anastasia, youngest daughter of Czar Nicholas II, who was murdered with his family at Ekaterinburg in 1918?—Lois Brown, Richmond, Va.

A. Moritz Furtmayr, one of Germany's top forensic experts, claims that he has positively identified the former Anna Anderson, 75, as the Russian Grand Duchess Anastasia. Furtmayr contends that Anderson's right ear is identical to that in a photo of Anastasia's right ear. Anna Anderson is currently married to former University of Virginia history professor John Manahan. She has petitioned for the last 50 years, in various German court fights, that she be legally recognized as the late czar's youngest daughter. Furtmayr's views may give rise to still another court case.

Q. I keep reading that there is a chance Gerald Ford will run for U.S. President in 1980. How much of a chance?—Sam Reilly, Oak Park, Ill.

A. Practically none. Gerald and Betty Ford now enjoy the best of all possible worlds, and they are not about to forsake it.

After Carter's First 100 Days— Questions the Experts Would Like to Ask the President

by Jim Karayn

The nine journalists who took part in the 1976 Presidential Debates and the three in the Vice Presidential Debate reply to Parade's query: 'If you knew then what you know now...?'

WASHINGTON, D.C. In his Administration's first 100 days, which ended Friday, President Carter has spent much of his time answering questions—at frequent press conferences, get-togethers with federal employees, a phone-in, and a town meeting.

At no time while President, though, has he been as visible answering questions as when he was a candidate.

During the campaign, nine reporters had a rare opportunity to interrogate Jimmy Carter face-to-face—before an estimated television audience of 200 million people throughout the world—on three different occasions. They were the questioners at the '76 Presidential Debates.

Since the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt, it has become customary for the press to assess a President's performance when he completes his first 100 days in office.

Holding to tradition, I asked those nine distinguished reporters from the debates:

"If you knew then what you know now about Carter, his policies, and his performance, what would you have asked him?"

When I put the question to ABC News correspondent Frank Reynolds, who took part in the first debate, he said he would have put these questions to Carter last Sept. 23 in Philadelphia:

"As a Washington 'outsider,' do you intend to bring new people into high government positions, or are we likely to see people like Cyrus Vance, Joe Califano, Mike Blumenthal, James Schlesinger and Zbigniew Brzezinski in top jobs? And Paul Warnke?"

"In view of your criticism of President Ford for 'government by veto' and his inability to get along with the Democratic Congress, do you think the time might ever come when you will unilaterally eliminate funding for 19 already approved water projects without first consulting the Congress?"

For the most part, the questioners—like the public—believe that Carter's brief record has been extremely good in terms of getting organized as the Chief Executive and in communicating with the public.

For instance, Jack Nelson, Washington bureau chief of The Los Angeles Times, comments: "Carter's biggest campaign promise was to restore the confidence of the people in government. So far, he has done that. He's the best communicator with the people since FDR."

The overall impressions of the reporters are, first, that what we have seen so far consists of dazzling Presidential public relations and, second, that it is simply too early to make conclusive judgments as to the President's performance.

Robert Maynard, editorial writer for The Washington Post, says: "Carter has been stunning on symbolism but shaky on substance."

Having made those general observations, the reporters—skeptical by training and by trade—still want to know the Administration's answers to a lot of questions that were put to Carter last fall. They are still concerned about Carter running the White House with his "old team." They are suspicious of his economic proposals, even questioning whether there is an economic plan—and if there is, whether there is sufficient money to pay for all the things Carter promised during the campaign. In foreign policy, the reporters—like the public—praised Carter's stand on human rights, but they expressed concern about the possible consequences.

Changed perceptions

It is not the questions, however, that have changed since the debates as much as the reporters' own perceptions of Carter—the man, the politician and now the President. Here are other responses of the '76 Presidential Debates reporters to my questions:

The subjects of the first debate were domestic issues and economic policy. Besides Reynolds, the questioners were James Gannon of The Wall Street Journal and Elizabeth Drew of The New Yorker magazine.

Gannon says if he knew then what he knows now, he would have asked Carter questions relating to the shape of his economic policy—specifically:

"After all your campaign criticism of Republican economics, how is it that you could propose an economic package featuring a one-time tax rebate very similar to Ford's 1975 proposal, an increase in the business investment tax credit atop the one Ford pushed through Congress, and a relatively small dose of public works? Why have you backed off from your campaign position in favor of standby wage-and-price controls and embraced the Republican stance of renouncing any controls, even standby authority?"

What's the difference?

Gannon would then like to add: "Isn't it true that the government's role in the economy under a Carter Administration will not be markedly different from what it would have been under a second Ford Administration?"

"For me," says Gannon, "that captures the most important thing that we learned about our new President since he was elected."

Elizabeth Drew also questioned Carter about economic matters, specifically about where he would find sufficient money for new or enlarged social programs including jobs, health, welfare reform, aid to cities, and changes in Social Security. Carter responded that he looked for a growth in the economy and a cut in unemployment to provide the extra money. She also asked him where he would find sufficient revenue to cut taxes for the middle- and lower-income groups. Carter said the tax cut could be made by eliminating loopholes in the present system.

When I asked Drew what she'd ask now, she said she would stick with her original questions.

'National interest'

The second debate took place in San Francisco on Oct. 6. The subject was defense and foreign policy. The questioners were Richard Valeriani, diplomatic correspondent for NBC News; Henry L. Trehitt, diplomatic correspondent of The Baltimore Sun, and Max Frankel, editorial page editor of The New York Times. Valeriani says:

"At the debate I asked Carter what his concept of the 'national interest' was, and he really did not answer. I would ask him to define the term, which is the basis for so much of what the United States does abroad.

"I would also ask: 'Do you really think there is any real possibility of eliminating all nuclear weapons? Isn't that just utopian rhetoric? Without nuclear weapons, what kind of defense policy could the U.S. maintain against the Soviet Union, which has the advantage in conventional weapons?'"

Trehitt, like Valeriani, would have liked to pin Carter down, especially on his first question: "Would you be willing to risk an oil embargo in order to promote human rights in Iran and Saudi Arabia and withhold arms from Saudi Arabia for the same purpose, and would you withhold grain from the Soviet Union in order to promote civil rights in that country?"

'Deft performance'

He continues: "Then, as now, my question regarding human rights is a valid one. He answered by not answering regarding the oil producers. Instead of saying whether he would carry the human rights issue to them, he told us what he would do—end all trade—if they embargoed us on oil. A deft performance. In practice, he has done nothing at all to promote human rights there.

"Regarding the Soviet Union, he said nothing except—by implication—that he would not use grain alone as a bargaining tool. As it turns out, he has been most vociferous regarding human rights in the Soviet Union."

Max Frankel joins his colleagues in wanting further clarification of Carter's answers to the questions he posed last October.

First debate: With domestic issues as the subject, the questioners were (l to r) Frank Reynolds, James Cannon, Elizabeth Drew, with Ed Newman, moderator.

He asked Carter how bad things would have to get domestically before there would be drastic cutbacks in arms spending. Carter didn't respond.

Frankel says: "I would still like to get an answer to the question, 'Where do you take some risk in the weapons area in order to reduce the risks to our national security in the economic and welfare areas?'"

Returning to foreign policy, Valeriani comments: "Carter is determined to show us how much he has learned about foreign affairs at the constant risk of putting his foot in his mouth. The Lone Ranger has been replaced by the Ad Lib."

Trehitt puts it differently: "Carter's inexperience in foreign affairs is glaring. Too often—for example, regarding the Middle East—he talks without appreciating the consequences. . . . I stick with my earlier judgment, in any case, that basically he is not to be pushed around, and I hope that other world leaders do not underestimate him in that regard."

The final debate was held Oct. 22 in Williamsburg, Va. The questioners were Nelson, Maynard and syndicated columnist Joseph Kraft. The subject matter was unlimited, but most of the questions to Carter concerned his character and his plans for running the government. Kraft now says he would have asked about the consequences of Carter making statements about human rights in other nations:

"Does he think his strong, outspoken and impromptu advocacy of human rights doesn't conflict with other objectives of American foreign policy, such as arms control, good relations with our allies and good relations with such friendly countries in Latin America as Argentina and Brazil?"

'Method in madness'

Asked if Carter's comments are completely off-the-cuff or carefully calculated, Kraft responds: "The notion that it is thoroughly planned is wrong. I find only some method in the madness."

Nelson asked Carter whether he was going to reach out to bring people with broad backgrounds and national experience into his campaign and his Presidential plans. Nelson now says:

"Even with hindsight, I probably would have asked that question in the same way. However, knowing what I now know—that an unusually large number of Georgians wound up in the Carter Administration, including more than 40 in the White House alone—I probably would have asked a follow-up question, such as, 'If you are elected, can the American people count on you to try to recruit the best-qualified people from throughout the country to help you run the federal government?'"

"Considering these facts, I may have been inclined to frame a question pinning him down on his promises to bring minorities and women into his Administration and pressing him on how many minorities and women played large roles in his campaign."

Maynard is more concerned about his personal perceptions of Carter:

"I came away from our Oct. 22 meeting 'liking' Jimmy Carter less and respecting him more.

Two meetings

"I'd met him only once before, when he sat for more than an hour with our editorial conference at the Post in March of 1975. He was cordial, gracious, and in frightful command of his facts. I carried the residue of that first meeting with me to the debate.

"There, I found a colder and more calculating Jimmy Carter, and I responded accordingly by tossing him a hard political question as my last. My unarticulated purpose was to shake a human response from a man whose mind was a massive computer program.

"In retrospect, I should have stayed

Walter F. Mondale gestures as he answers a question during meeting with Robert J. Dole—the first time Vice Presidential candidates have ever held debate.

CARTER CONTINUED

to my earlier course of exploring him on issues. Had I done that, I would have asked him what values would inform his policy on Southern Africa.

"Since the debate and the election, my perception of Carter as a carefully studied man who rarely goes off his program has been substantiated by his performance as President."

Adds Nelson: "Carter has turned out to be much more of a politician and pragmatist—as opposed to an idealist—than I had anticipated."

Kraft feels Carter's character was evident during the debates:

"I believe that very few of the qualities now apparent in the President were totally hidden in the campaign. I think the debates helped to surface these qualities for perspicacious people. But I think it's unfortunate that we didn't highlight them more."

Mondale vs. Dole

The Vice Presidential Debate was the first time candidates for the second highest office have ever debated. Some observers claim that more voters made up their minds that night than during any of the Presidential debates.

Walter F. Mondale and Robert J. Dole met in Houston, Oct. 15. The questioners were Walter Mears, special correspondent for the Associated Press; Hal Bruno, chief political correspondent for Newsweek, and Marilyn Berger, White House correspondent for NBC News. The moderator was Jim Hoge, editor in chief of The Chicago Sun-Times and The Chicago Daily News.

The controversy over President Ford's statement in the second debate that "there is no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe" led Mears to ask Mondale to describe the differences between the two tickets on policy toward that part of the world.

"He did, sort of, answer my question," says Mears, "although I was frustrated at the time at the lack of a follow-up opportunity to get him to answer a part of the question he skipped: whether the statements he and Carter had made should be interpreted to mean that the United States would help an Eastern European nation that tried to overthrow Soviet domination.

"But what seemed then to be a subordinate part of the reply has taken on added significance now. That was Mondale's statement that a new Administration would push the human rights provisions of the Helsinki agreement. That has become a significant part of Carter's foreign policy."

Bruno says he would have pressed Mondale harder on how the Carter Administration expected "to fill its shopping list of campaign promises, find the money to do it, and at the same time achieve its stated goal of balancing the budget within four years."

Dealing with Congress

In the area of relations with Congress, Marilyn Berger had wanted to ask Mondale, and would still like to ask him: "Legislators in Georgia have spoken of Carter's unwillingness to compromise unless faced with certain defeat. As a member of the Senate, what is your judgment about Carter's ability to deal with Congress and get his legislative programs through?"

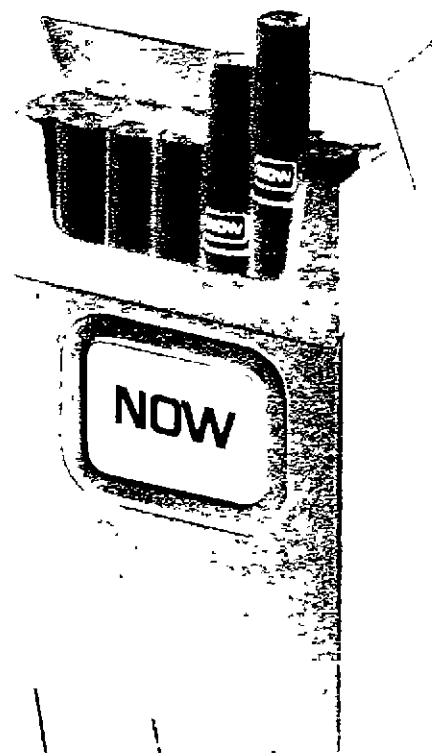

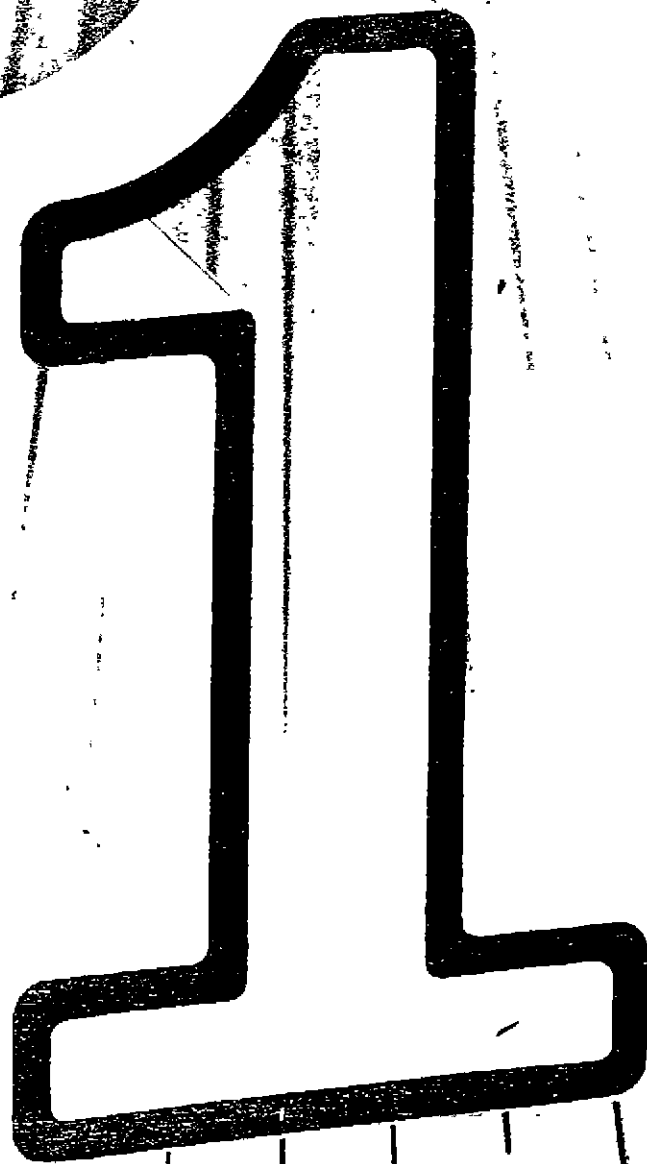

Adds Mears: "I'd want to ask follow-up questions on national health insurance—a precise definition of what form it should take, how it would be paid for, and how a program as costly as this can be implemented if all of the other promises are to be fulfilled while balancing the budget."

"A question I didn't ask, but would have liked to ask—especially with the way things have gone—is how President Carter and Vice President Mondale would work with the Democratic majority in Congress. As things have turned out, they're not doing very well; and if Vice President Mondale has an important role to play, it certainly should be in dealing with the Democratic leadership in Congress."

All of this is by way of hindsight, of course. It's dabbling in might-have-beens. Who knows, for example, what Carter's answers might have been if he knew then what he knows now?

Hostage Hank Siegel is rushed into the hospital from ambulance after his release by Hanafi Muslims during their recent takeover of B'nai B'rith headquarters in Washington. In the article he describes terror and torment suffered by bound captives.

Journal of a Hostage

by Hank Siegel

How do ordinary people react when they are suddenly confronted with threats of execution by armed invaders? What course of action seems to offer the best hope for survival? Are there certain psychological or tactical approaches to be followed in dealing with a terrorist? The following article, by a survivor of the Hanafi Muslim raid in Washington, may not give definitive answers to all these questions, but it offers some unusually clear insights into the thinking of both terrorists and their victims locked in deadly confrontation.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

As I lay face down on the dirty cement floor of B'nai B'rith headquarters' unfinished conference room, my wrists tightly bound above my head, I wondered if I had done the right thing in complaining about the difficulty I had in breathing.

Only a minute earlier, Hamaas Abdul Khaalis, leader of the Hanafi Muslim group, had offered to cut off my head, so that I might have a "quick and clean" death instead of suffering another heart attack.

I thought back to more than 12 hours earlier. There had been nothing that Wednesday morning of March 9 to indicate that it would be different from all others. In the area of my seventh-floor office, typewriters beat rhythmically and telephones rang.

At 11:20 I was strolling down the hall when a secretary quietly informed me that she had just received a call that "a man with a gun had seized the building engineer and another man in the lobby." I rounded up an executive and about 10 women employees, and we assembled in an office overlooking Rhode Island Avenue. I sensed that we were already too late for escape when I observed half a dozen police in front of the building and guests at the Holiday Inn across the street gawking from windows.

A few seconds later another phone caller said gunmen were on the fifth floor. Then a young black employee burst into the room and exclaimed that he had come from the fifth floor, where he "saw this dude with a big gun."

Suddenly there was shouting on our floor: "All right, come on out!" No one answered. More shouts and doors pounded on. We heard someone at our door.

"Open up and get the hell out of there," a voice ordered. Then the door flew open, its lock-bolt flying across the room.

Employee is stabbed

A large man stormed in wearing a green fatigue baseball cap, a huge machete and hunting knife and brandishing a Magnum in one hand, a rifle in the other.

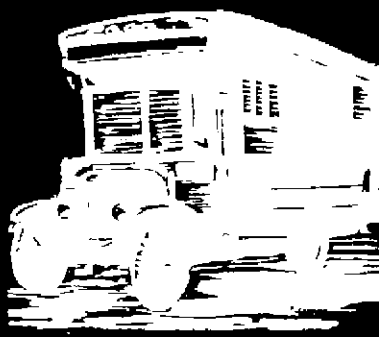

We were marched into the hallway, where another terrorist—even more heavily armed—reported that he had completed a check of the floor. Pointing to a closed door, he ordered the young black employee, Alton Kirkland, 21, to kick it open. As Kirkland went to resume his place on the floor, the second terrorist—we were later to learn that his name was Adam—suddenly pulled one of the three knives in his belt and slashed Kirkland in the back,

The year was 1925, and a couple of young men from Michigan decided to "go west" and make their mark. They both liked to tinker with cars, so it was only natural that they build a home on wheels. Starting with a Ford 1½-ton Model T truck, they created a masterpiece of innovation, complete with running water, electric lights, bookcases, a radio and phonograph, two bunks, a wardrobe, a table and chairs—even a swivel seat for the driver.

Indeed, Ira E. Flanagan and Marvin P. Mann could have had today's recreation vehicles in mind. Now homes on wheels are not only for the young. Retired people in increasing numbers are turning to recreation vehicles (known as RVs), in some cases as their primary residences. Caravan clubs are springing up (one even toured Russia in RVs). And many state parks are providing facilities for RVs that enable families to take low-cost vacations. Seems that thousands are hopping on the Flanagan-Mann bandwagon.

"An outlandish bargain." That's what gasoline is, according to engineer Paul Howells in Environmental Action. In a typical situation, he says, a gallon of gasoline "can do the work of two 'person-months' of heavy labor; we get it for about six minutes of our own. A kilowatt-hour is equivalent to a week of hard work; we pay with about 30 seconds of effort." And Howells adds this sad truth: "What we get so cheaply we value little and tend to waste."

"IT DOESN'T POLLUTE THE AIR, IT DOESN'T MAKE EXCESSIVE NOISE AND IT DOESN'T USE LEADED GASOLINE... IT DOESN'T HAVE AN ENGINE!"

Explorers all. The recent "Mobil Showcase" TV series, Ten Who Dared, featured lesser-known historic figures like Mary Kingsley and Jedediah Smith as well as more famous explorers. Their stories, and others, are told in a beautifully illustrated 336-page book. For a copy, send check or money order for $14.95 to: Ten Who Dared, P.O. Box 1934, Kansas City, Missouri 64140.

Grass Seed Is For The Birds! Zoysia Saves Time, Work, Money

Amazony is the T.M. Reg.
U.S. Pat. Office for our Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass.

GRASS SEED WILL NEVER GROW A LAWN LIKE THIS!
SAVE WITH OUR SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER UP TO 200 AMAZOY ZOYSIA GRASS PLUGS FREE!

By Mike Sandin
Agronomist

Every year I see people pour more and more money into their lawns. They dig, fertilize and lime. They rake it all in. They scatter their seed and roll and water it.

Birds love it! Seeds which aren't washed away by rain give them a feast. But some seed grows, and soon it's time to weed, water and mow, mow . . .

until summer comes to burn the lawn into hay, or crabgrass and diseases infect it.

That's what happens to ordinary grass, but not to Amazony Zoysia.

"MOWED IT 2 TIMES," WRITES WOMAN

For example, Mrs. M. R. Mitter writes me how her lawn ". . . is the envy of all who see it. When everybody's lawns around here are brown from drought ours just stays as green as ever. I've never watered it, only when I put the plugs in . . . Last summer we had it mowed (2) times. Another thing, we never have to pull any weeds — it's just wonderful!"

And from Iowa came word that the state's largest Men's Garden Club picked a Zoysia lawn as the "top lawn — nearly perfect" in its area. Yet this lawn had been watered only once all summer up to August!

Cuts Your Work, Saves You Money

Your deep-rooted, established Amazony lawn saves you time and money in many ways. It never needs replacement . . . ends re-seeding forever. Fertilizing and watering (water costs money, too) are rarely if ever needed. It ends the need for crabgrass killers permanently. It cuts pushing a noisy mower in the blistering sun by 2/3.

CHOKES OUT CRABGRASS

Thick rich, luxurious Amazony grows into a carpet of grass that chokes out crabgrass and weeds all summer long. It will NOT winter kill. Goes off its green color after killing frost, regains fresh new beauty every Spring — a true perennial!

For Slopes, Play Areas, Bare Spots

End erosion of slopes with Amazony. Perfect answer for hard-to-cover spots, play-worn areas.

Your Own Supply of Plug Transplants

Established Amazony gives you Zoysia plugs to plant in other areas as desired!

NO SEED, NO SOD!

There's no seed that produces winter-hardy Meyer Zoysia. Sod of ordinary grass brings with it the problems of seed, like weeds, diseases, burning out, other ills.

Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass Was Perfected by U.S. Govt.: Released in Cooperation With U.S. Golf Assoc. as a superior grass.

Order guaranteed Amazony plugs from your lawn or from the U.S. Golf Assoc. plugs will be delivered at earliest correct time for planting. No. 10-1000-0000

We ship all orders the same day they are taken from the stock. Shipping charges against the most economical means. © Zoysia Plant Association, 1977

DROUGHT AND WEAR RESISTANT
Amazony lawns take cooking and parties children playing on it won't hurt it, or themselves! Stays green right thru scorching heat and drought!

NO NEED TO RIP OUT PRESENT GRASS
PLUG AMAZOY INTO OLD LAWN, NEW GROUND OR NURSERY AREA

Just set Amazony plugs into holes in ground like a cork in a bottle. Plant 1 foot apart, checkerboard style. Every plug 3 sq. inches.

When planted in existing lawn areas plugs will spread to drive out old, unwanted growth, including weeds. Easy planting instructions with order.

PAID STEP-ON PLUGGER IS . . . FREE WITH ORDER OF 100 PLUGS OR MORE

Amazony exclusive! No one else can offer you this patented 2-way plugger. Saves bending, time, work. Light, rugged, invaluable for transplanting. Cuts away competing growth as it digs plug holes

Every Plug
Guaranteed to Grow
In Your Area • In Your Soil

- AMAZOY WON'T WINTER KILL—has survived temperatures 30° below zero!
- AMAZOY WON'T HEAT KILL—when other grasses burn out, Amazony remains green and lively!

Plug Amazony into the entire lawn or problem areas. Plug it into bare soil, "bald" soil, dry or even salty, sandy beach areas. I guarantee every plug to grow . . . from part shade to full sun! Any plug failing to grow in 30 days replaced FREE! Since we're hardly in business for the fee of it, you know we're 100% sure of our product.

If it isn't Amazony, you're not getting the plugs that made Zoysia famous.

'...they threatened to hang two men out of the window..'

snarling, "You black bastard, you work for bwana!"

The man with the baseball cap, who was his superior, grabbed for Adam, but not before he had slashed Kirkland's thigh. "You do that again and I'll kill you," the first terrorist warned Adam.

As Kirkland lay bleeding on the floor, a secretary asked if she could try to stem the blood, but she was told to "let him bleed." After a few minutes, a voice called to us to go to the sixth floor, where hostages were being collected. Two of our group asked if we could carry Kirkland but were refused.

"Let him walk," a terrorist said but then relented, saying we could hold him under the shoulders.

The sixth-floor lobby was filled with more than two dozen captives, all lying face down on the carpeting. We were told to lie on top of them, and a third group behind us was ordered to lie on top of us. No sooner had this been done than we were told to go up to the eighth floor, where there was an unfinished conference room large enough to hold all the 100-plus hostages. Buckets of paint, sections of wallboard, pieces of timber and other materials were strewn about.

Ordered to lie face down on the Muslim leader Hamaas Abdul Khaalis on way to be booked at police headquarters. He offered to behead Siegel to spare him death from a heart attack.

floor, with each hostage holding the feet of the person in front of him, we counted off. The women were relieved of their pocketbooks, the men of their fingernail files, keys and the like. Then all of the men were bound with their hands behind them—some with their own ties, others with wire the workmen had been using.

For nearly an hour we remained this way, everyone calm but wondering what it was all about. "Why? Why?" we asked each other. Most of us thought about Nazi Germany—there were two survivors of Hitler's death camps among us. We didn't have much longer to wait. A large, goateed man, his head wrapped in a black cloth, marched in authoritatively. With a deep, resonant voice, he identified himself as Hamaas Abdul Khaalis and said that Allah had told him to seize 100 of us to mete out retribution.

'The true Muslims'

He told us that he was leader of the Hanafi Muslims—"the true Muslims"—and that four years ago a rival group "financed by Zionists" had murdered his wife and four of his children, including an infant. He railed about a film portraying the life of Mohammad—"also financed by Jews"—which he said was full of errors and he wanted to keep from being exhibited. He even blamed Jews for financing the slave trade of Colonial America. He declared that the Koran said the Jews were destined to be forever wanderers and that America—where "the Jews owned all the banks and the media"—would soon expel them.

During his rambling discourse he repeatedly warned that "heads would roll" and "brains would be blown out." Then he added, "There are no innocent victims in a holy war."

He ordered men and women placed on opposite sides of the room, telling his men ("brothers"—and he called us that as well) to respect the women ("sisters"). "I am a family man," he said. "I have many wives and children. My men here have wives and children."

He said the women would not be raped nor touched in any way . . . unless there was a "hero" among them. Then, her head would roll, too.

Khaalis asked for someone who could serve as his secretary, settling on a blonde who said she knew the switchboard and, when asked, acknowledged that she was also non-Jewish. The two of them went off into the wing that served as the office of the Anti-Defamation League and which he had established as his command post.

Two terrorists—there were seven in all—posted themselves at each end of the room, and throughout the 39 hours they or their relief kept pistols and rifles aimed at us, fingers always resting on triggers.

As the hours dragged by, two or three of the women who were under medical care called for their pills or water. The guards permitted it so long as no one left the room. They also permitted the hostages to go to the lavatory.

Once, when Khaalis asked who was not afraid to die, a painter who was part of the construction crew said he wasn't.

Hostage beaten

Khaalis became infuriated. "Oh," he stormed, "we have a hero! Come here hero!" Then Khaalis struck the painter with the butt of his pistol and ordered him to lie face down. His wrists and ankles were tied behind his back so there would be a constant pressure from the pulling. The painter remained that way for about 12 hours, once pleading with his captors to kill him and get him out of his misery. Then Khaalis suddenly ordered him untied because he was "the only honest man here."

Around midnight I found that the long hours of sitting on the cement with my hands bound tightly behind me was causing a shortness of breath. And since I had had a heart attack only five months earlier, I became worried. I called to one of the guards that I was having trouble breathing. "What do you want me to do?" he asked.

"If you tie my hands in front," I replied, "I'll probably be all right." He brought me to the center of the room, retied my hands above my head and told me to lie face down on the floor.

When Khaalis saw me, he wanted to know why I was getting "special treatment." Informed, he had me stand up and said, "Mister, you're not going to die on me, are you? You're not going to die of a heart attack. Why don't you die like a man? Allah says 'live by the sword and die by the sword.'" And with that, he grabbed the handle of his sword. "Dying from a heart attack is dirty," he added.

'Quick and clean'

I assured him I could breathe much better now that my hands were in front and I would be fine. "If you change your mind, I can make it quick and clean for you," he assured me and walked out.

Periodically, Khaalis and several other terrorists asked me how I felt.

During the first 22 hours or so, the only nourishment we received was water, fed to us by two of the women. On Thursday morning, Khaalis told us we'd get breakfast. We got a small cup of coffee and one donut each. Since I had inexplicably been ordered untied earlier that morning, I volunteered to help feed the others. "Relax, mister, you're on vacation," I was told.

Several times during the siege, the terrorists flew into nervous rages. Once, spotting sharpshooters in the Holiday Inn, they threatened to hang two of the older men out the window by their feet. The helicopters circling above made them nervous. When we heard noises on the roof, Khaalis ran in and asked what it was. "It was me," one captive said. "I bumped my head." Khaalis called him a goddamn liar and left after warning still again that many of us would die. On another occasion, we thought a shootout had begun; but it was only a terrorist who had accidentally fired his pistol.

About 2 p.m. Thursday, Khaalis came in our room and asked, "Where's the heart condition? Front and center!"

I pulled myself up slowly, wondering what was going to happen now.

"Face the wall, straddle your legs and lean your head against the wall," he said, at the same time telling his lieutenant to aim his rifle at my head. He asked my name, then said, "Mr. Siegel, there's an elevator coming up. If there's a cop on top of it, he's dead and you're dead."

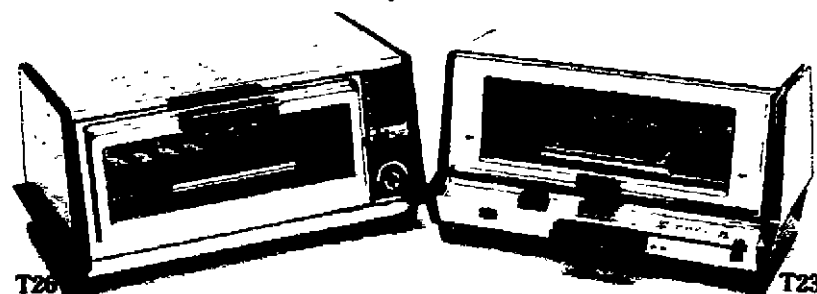

When the elevator reached the eighth floor, Khaalis said quietly, "You're lucky, Mr. Siegel. I'm going to send you down. But first you've got to promise to send the elevator right back to the eighth floor and you've got to thank Allah for letting you go. Now let me hear you praise Allah."

I did, and he let the elevator doors close. My ordeal was over. When I reached the first floor, two plainclothes police officers, two FBI agents and two men from the Rescue Squad were waiting for me. They swept me to the hotel next door, gave me a quick electrocardiogram and wheeled me into an ambulance for the ride to George Washington University Hospital—the same hospital I'd been rushed to in September.

ber. I was deeply concerned and felt guilty over the fate of friends and colleagues I had left behind to face still further torture—perhaps death.

But for the next three hours, while doctors and nurses checked my heart and blood pressure, I kept busy retelling in detail the living hell that was the eighth floor of the B'nai B'rith building, giving the police vital information about the terrorists, their arms and their state of mind. Much of the information came as a surprise to the police—and resulted in a drastic change of strategy that went from a proposed police SWAT attack to negotiation by the ambassadors of Egypt, Iran and Pakistan. Ten hours later, it was all over and the hostages emerged, deliriously happy.

DEFENSIVE MEDICINE

About 75% of the physicians in America, claims an American Medical Association poll, are currently practicing "defensive medicine."

That's the name given to the practice of ordering extra tests and procedures for patients in order to protect the doctor against a potential malpractice suit.

The result is that medical bills are going sky-high.

More than 90% of the doctors who responded to the AMA poll indicated that they are far more conscious of potential malpractice suits today than they were in the past. As a result, a sizable number of doctors are ordering X-rays, lab work-ups, and other extra tests.

One patient in Los Angeles who complained of headaches was thoroughly examined by her physician for $125, ordered to take a brain scan for $340, an electroencephalogram for $80, skull X-rays for $100, and a battery of lab tests that cost $200.

Not only are patients paying more for tests, but three out of five doctors, according to the American Medical News, admit they had-raised their own fees in 1975 because of larger malpractice insurance premiums.

Just how and where this vicious cycle will break, no one seems to know.

BRIbery EVERYWHERE

Is it possible for giant corporations like Lockheed, Boeing, and Gulf Oil to do business overseas without bribing various officials?

Many executives think not and for example point to Canada's burgeoning payoff scandal. The Canadians are supposedly moral, honest, and strait-laced. Yet Canadian Auditor General James Macdonell recently reported to Parliament that the Atomic Energy Corporation of Canada, a Crown corporation responsible for marketing the Canadian Candu nuclear reactor, had paid out almost $16 million in "agent fees" to sell the Candu reactor to South Korea and Argentina.

Most of the "agent fees" had moved through coded Swiss bank accounts. Many of these numbered accounts have proved a "national embarrassment" to Switzerland, and a few weeks ago Leo Schurmann, vice president of the Swiss National Bank, suggested that they be abolished.

NATURAL BIRTH CONTROL

A natural anti-baby pill which apparently has been used in India for a long time has been found effective in laboratory tests.

Women in the northwest Indian province of Rajasthan take dried carrot seeds for several days after coitus if they don't want any children. Zoologists at Rajasthan University tested an extract of this drug on mice and found it had a contraceptive effect.

Scientists suspect that the substance prevents the fertilized egg from embedding itself in the mucous membrane of the uterus, a process called nidation.

COUNTRESS MARINA DE BRANTES AT NEW YORK RESTAURANT

A FRENCH RELATIVE

In New York it is possible for a French woman of high social rank to do something that she could not do in Paris.

Countess Marina de Brantes, a relative by marriage of French President Giscard d'Estaing, is a typical example. She runs an excellent restaurant, Le Coup de Fusil.

In addition she fills catering orders and, on the floor above the restaurant, teaches cooking secrets to interested Americans.

BANKS AND MINORITIES

If you are a woman, a black, a Catholic or a Jew, your chances of becoming a top-level bank employee aren't too good, according to the Senate Banking Committee. And the Treasury Department, which is charged with enforcing equal employment opportunities in the banking world, isn't doing much about the situation, says the committee.

In a nationwide study of hiring practices by financial institutions, widespread discrimination against women, racial, ethnic and religious minorities was found to be routine.

Herewith some of the findings:

1. Women comprise 63.3% of the work force in banks and 39% of the general work force, but only 21.4% of the officer and manager positions in banks. Women are concentrated in the lowest-paid office and clerical bank jobs, where they make up 82.6% of employees.

2. Minority groups are 15.9% of the total bank work force, 11% of the general work force, but only 5.5% of the officers and managers in banks.

3. White males hold 75% of the officer and manager jobs, even though they comprise less than one-third of the bank work force (31.7%).

4. There are very few Catholics or Jews holding management positions at commercial banks, even in areas where these groups make up a substantial portion of the population.

The Senate Banking Committee says that these figures reported by the banking industry may conceal a worse pattern of discrimination. The industry, it adds, reclassifies certain functions from a lower to a higher job category without changing the nature of the job in order to make the employment record look better.

SOVIET PILOT VIKTOR BYELENKO WITH SON DIMA BEFORE DEFECTION TO THE WEST

DEBRIEFING Viktor Byelenko, the Soviet pilot who landed his MIG-25 in Japan last Sept. 6, has spent the past several months telling his story to the CIA.

According to the German magazine "Stern," which reports access to the transcripts of the investigation, Byelenko has revealed more than 4000 secrets about squadron locations in the Soviet Union, locations of underground rocket stations, command headquarters and atomic bomb depots, as well as the secret code of his squadron.

According to Byelenko, the Soviet army is plagued by lack of discipline and refusal to obey orders. Because of his "dissolute life-style" in Moscow--where he taught young pilots in the army's night school--Byelenko came to the attention of his superiors and was exiled to the bomber station in Siberia. Many of his fellow pilots there were also disciplinary cases.

"During the dreary winter we had two to five suicides per month in our barracks," Byelenko says. "Bed neighbors of these men automatically got seven days in the stockade for not preventing it, forcing us to denounce potential suicides."

Byelenko claims he organized cadres of 10 men each to protect themselves from spies. These cadres would meet at assigned hours in the toilet and play roulette, listen to a homemade transistor radio and exchange Western newspapers that had been smuggled in.

According to his story, there were 84 different types of punishment for anyone caught breaking the strict rules. Deserters, for example, were brought back and shot in front of the squadron.

"Homosexuals were a serious problem in our squadrons," he also told the CIA. "Every night there was lots of sex activity in our sleeping quarters." For the others, "cultural excursions" were organized by the troop commanders to take the men to army brothels.

Byelenko also told about the phony air bases which were designed to look real but were made of papier-maché and could be manned by 12 soldiers. Apparently they had been fooling American satellites for years. Now, because of Byelenko's revelations, the Pentagon has discovered 134 of these phony bases along the Chinese border.

According to Byelenko, the Red Army strength is located underground: "There are bases with several thousand soldiers, miles of tunnel roads, hangars and runways which lead to the ground tunnels."

Since his defection, Byelenko has been shown around various American air bases and is astonished by the free, multi-faceted life of an American pilot.

"If my comrades could see for five minutes what I have seen," he says, "there would be an immediate revolution in our regiment."

RACECOURSE DEALS

Great Britain has signed contracts worth $14 million with Saudi Arabia and Bahrain to supply those countries with horse racetracks and supporting facilities. Arabian horses -- which are best suited to distances of up to half a mile -- will be raced on the tracks, the first of which will probably be built in Riyadh, the Saudi capital.

A few weeks ago a British company, Pritchard Services, in conjunction with Waste Management, Inc., of Chicago, won a $243 million contract for the collection and disposal of garbage in Riyadh. The Chicago company and Pritchard entered into a 60-40 deal with Prince Abdel-Rahmin Bin Abdullah, a nephew of the late King Ibn Saud. It does not hurt to have an influential partner like the prince when it comes to setting up these Saudi deals.

FLU SUITS

The U.S. Justice Department will hire another 25 attorneys to handle swine-flu lawsuits. These are expected to number about 10,000, from people who were inoculated with the government's vaccine and suffered after-effects.

MICHELE MORGAN AND HUMPHREY BOGART IN "PASSAGE TO MARSEILLE"

HOLLYWOOD WORLD WAR II

Between 1939 and 1945, the era of World War II, Hollywood turned out some 200 anti-Nazi war movies, all of which were barred from Hitler's Germany.

Now, Humphrey Bogart and Errol Flynn are being shown in such old-time movies all over Germany. Seven Warner Bros. films are in German release, thanks to a $50,000 grant from the German government to pay U.S. rental fees.

The films opened early this year in Hamburg, Munich, and Cologne, and the first one starred the late Humphrey Bogart as a French Resistance fighter in "Passage to Marseille."

The films are booked as a series under the title "Hollywood and the Nazis." Mostly they are attended by young people who find them period pieces.

Hans Blumenberg, film critic of Die Zeit, writes of the series: "Warner Bros. lined up Bogart and Flynn against the Germans as if they were fighting pirates and gangsters of prewar films. The scenes and costumes are changed, but the plots are hardly altered."

Your Safe Deposit Box: What to Put In, What to Keep Out

by Leonard Sloane

Safe deposit boxes offer maximum security for valuables, personal and financial documents. But never put in cash, property of others or original wills.

What do you have in your safe deposit box?

Many who rent safe deposit boxes—and pay from $5 a year for the smallest to $75 for the largest—are not only uncertain what to put in them, but also whether they should be registered in one name or two. What's more, renters are frequently unaware of the availability of insurance to provide added protection.

What should and shouldn't go into a box is largely based on common sense. As Prof. Julian S. Bush, who teaches estate planning at Columbia Law School and counsels the New York law firm of Roberts & Holland, notes: "The things to keep in a safe deposit box are generally articles of intrinsic value. The things not to keep there are documents that are needed in a hurry when the owner dies."

For when one dies, his box is normally sealed by the bank until the time-consuming legal procedures are taken to allow someone else to "enter" the box. Both bankers and tax authorities attempt to keep track of deaths in their locale to prevent the improper withdrawal of items by a deputy—a relative or friend who was authorized by the owner to open his box.

Therefore, an original will should not be left in a safe deposit box. Keep it in a safe place at home or, better still, the vault of your lawyer, executor or accountant. For the same reason, cemetery deeds and burial instructions shouldn't be in a box where they may not be accessible when most needed.

Large amounts of cash do not belong in a lock box. One financial adviser calls such holdings "an unacceptable moral hazard," and even the layman can recognize that the presence of a substantial amount of money in a box is a possible indication of criminal activity or intent to evade income tax.

Whose property?

Finally, unregistered property belonging to others has no business being in your safe deposit box. For instance, jewelry or bonds issued to "bearer" that are the property of another person may be presumed instead to be owned by the owner of the box. After his death, it then becomes the burden of his estate to prove otherwise—and this can be difficult, if not impossible, to do.

As for those items that properly should be stored in a box, a good example is personal papers. Birth and marriage certificates, military service papers, citizenship papers and important family records are among those that belong in your safe deposit box. Jewelry, medals, rare coins and stamps, family heirlooms and other precious possessions are also safest in a vault.

Then there are original signed documents dealing with family and business financial matters. Among them are deeds and mortgages relating to a house, trust agreements, contracts, leases and court decrees. Securities also should be kept in a box, regardless of whether they are registered in an individual's name or in bearer form.

While there is some variance of opinion among lawyers, bankers and other individuals in the safe deposit field about joint versus individual rental of a box, most of these experts advise a married couple to rent the box in a single name. By doing so, a presumption is established that all of the property in the box not registered in a joint name belongs solely to the renter, thus eliminating much of the doubt that could be created following a death about the actual ownership of certain items there.

Use a single name

Placing a safe deposit box in a single name does not limit its use to that person, of course, since a deputy or deputies can be named with authorization to enter the box upon signing the access card and presentation of the key. When both the husband and the wife have a significant number of valuables in their own names, each might rent a separate box to preclude any uncertainty after the death of one party as to the ownership of this material.

Although a safe deposit box, as its name indicates, is designated as a place of safekeeping and is certainly a more secure location for valuables than a mattress, a drawer or a vault at home, the possibility nevertheless exists that the items in a box may be stolen. The odds are slim that such an event could occur because of the elaborate security and protection systems that most banks have at their vaults, but there have been thefts from safe deposit boxes in the United States in the 100 or more years they have been in existence totaling millions of dollars in property.

The most famous of these burglaries was the one in 1972, when thieves blasted their way through the top of the vault at the Laguna Niguel branch of the United California Bank in Orange County, Cal. They escaped with property valued at well over $5 million.

Since the law is different in each state regarding the rights of those who offer boxes and those who use them, there is no clear-cut answer to the question of who is liable under such circumstances. Banks usually assert, though, that as long as they exercise reasonable care and diligence in safeguarding the contents of a box, they are relieved of any further liability to the user.

The application card for a safe deposit box generally has a paragraph in small print that emphasizes the bank's position concerning liability. A typical paragraph used by one of the nation's biggest banks includes this sentence:

"It is expressly understood and agreed that the liability of the lessor in respect to any such securities, jewelry and valuable papers is limited to the exercise of ordinary care and that under no circumstances shall the lessor be liable for the loss or destruction of any other property, including money, placed in said safe."

Despite this disclaimer, some victims of a lock-box burglary have sued their banks to recover their losses—and at times have been successful in obtaining reimbursement for all or part. In addition, a number of banks have purchased safe deposit insurance to provide for claims of this kind. But banks that are so protected rarely advertise the fact, since there is a strong feeling among safe deposit officials that this type of advertising is equivalent to admitting to customers and potential customers that their vaults are not completely safe.

Special insurance policies

As a result, many renters have bought special insurance policies for the contents of their boxes, besides their personal floater policies and homeowner policies. For the last four years, some insurers have been offering burglary and robbery coverage specifically tailored for safe-deposit-box owners.

One company selling this insurance, for example, is Aetna Life & Casualty, which has established premiums of 50¢ per $1000 of protection—with a minimum premium of $5 and no maximum limit. This policy applies to most valuables, including coin collections, but excludes money left in a box.

Charles Q. Swarts, secretary of Aetna, once gave this rationale for the development of safe-deposit-box policies: "Negligence is established in a court of law and litigation is expensive." The buyer of safe-deposit-box insurance does not have to prove the bank's negligence nor does he have to go to the expense of suing.

Have proof of losses

Yet when a claim is made to the insurance company, a boxholder will be asked to provide proof of his losses. Registered stocks and bonds, as recorded in the books of corporate transfer agents, are relatively easy to replace, even though a loss instrument bond costing 3 to 4 percent of the value may be required. The ownership of jewelry and other items of intrinsic value can usually be verified by receipts, photographs or appraisals.

At the very least, everyone with a safe deposit box should know precisely what it contains, in the event of a crisis. An inventory record can be made on a sheet of paper or on a form provided by insurers for a handy checklist of the major items and, if applicable, their serial numbers. But remember to keep this record at home—not in the box whose contents are described.

my FAVORITE jokes

by MICKEY FREEMAN

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mickey Freeman was Private Zimmerman on TV's "Sergeant Bilko" show, has played top clubs from New York to Las Vegas, and is in demand as a speaker for Israel bonds. He does a tremendous amount of flying and says, "I wish I could have been in all the places my luggage was."

Here are some of Mickey's favorite jokes:

A woman went to the bank to cash her husband's paycheck. "It needs an endorsement," the teller explained. The woman thought for a moment, then wrote on the back of the check, "Joe is a wonderful husband."

A couple returned to their theater seats after intermission. In a voice of concern the man asked the gentleman seated on the aisle, "Did I step on your feet on the way out?" "You certainly did!" came the angry reply. "It's all right, Bertha," the man said to his wife. "This is our row."

People are funny. Tell a man there are 270,864,000 stars in the sky, and he'll believe you. But let him pass a "wet paint" sign, and he has to personally touch it.

A cheapskate was shopping for an inexpensive birthday gift for his friend. The only thing he could find in his price range was a badly broken vase. He bought it for almost nothing and asked the store to ship it, figuring his friend would think it was broken in the mail. A week later he received a note: "Many thanks for the vase. It was nice of you to wrap each piece separately."

A couple is dining in a swanky restaurant and the waiter says, "Pardon me, madam, but your husband just slid under the table." She replies, "Oh no, my husband just walked in through the front door."

A panhandler stops a man and says, "Can you spare a dime for a cup of coffee?" The man gives him a dime. The panhandler walks away and the man follows him. The panhandler asks, "Why are you following me?" The man says, "I'm just trying to find out where you can get coffee for that price."

Ad in a college newspaper: "Neglected lady wishes to correspond with young male student—her son."

The two cub scouts whose brother had fallen into the lake rushed home in tears. "We tried everything," they sobbed. "We even tried giving him artificial respiration, but he kept getting up and walking away!"

A gambler who had run a casino in Las Vegas all his life opened an undertaking establishment. His friend dropped in, took a look and said, "Hey, Joe, you're doing great—10 bodies!" And Joe said, "Nah, five of them are shills."

Definition of a boss: "A man who comes to the office late when you're early and early when you're late."

Definition of an optimist: A man who jumps off the top of the World Trade Center and around the 50th floor says, "Well, so far, so good."

Life is funny. If you're rich and you have two jobs, you're diversified. If you're poor, you're moonlighting.

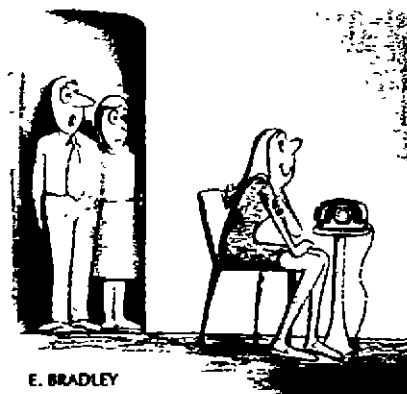

A man is dying and says to his wife, "Give the house in the country to our son Bob." She says, "You know Bob likes the city. I'd give it to our son Louis." The man says all right.

"And the business," he says, "give to our son Peter." She says, "In two years he'll run the business into the ground. I'd give the business to Bob." He says all right.

"Look, my limousine," he says, "give to our daughter Mildred." His wife says, "With her driving record, in three months it'll be a wreck."

The husband says, "Now, just a minute! Who's dying, you or me?"

FIRST DAY OF ISSUE
OFFICIAL COMMEMORATIVE STAMP OF THE SOCIALIST REPUBLIC OF VIETNAM

Announcing the opening of subscription rolls to The International Collection

Richly engraved First Day Covers of incomparable quality bearing the world's most important new wildlife stamps—each postmarked with the first day cancellation in the country of origin.

Subscription deadline: May 31, 1977
After that date, no new subscriptions will ever again be accepted.

FOR A VERY LIMITED TIME, you have the opportunity to subscribe to the only official collection of First Day Covers devoted solely to wildlife stamps from around the world.

This is the only First Day Cover collection authorized by the prestigious World Wildlife Fund, headquartered in Switzerland. And it is available exclusively to subscribers. Charter subscribers have already received twelve magnificent issues. The final date for entering new subscriptions to this beautiful collection is May 31, 1977. After that date, the rolls will be permanently closed—never to be reopened again.

Outstanding issues from every part of the world

As a subscriber, you will receive outstanding new wildlife stamps, from countries around the world, on a systematic monthly basis.

Each of these beautiful new wildlife stamps will be sent to you as part of an individual First Day Cover of incomparable quality. Every cover will be a limited edition collector's item—combining an original work of art with the new wildlife stamp and the first day cancellation applied in the issuing country at the designated post office of first issue.

As astute collectors know, this post office cancellation is extremely desirable, since it permanently and officially certifies the special First Day of Issue status of both stamp and cover.

Portraying the wildlife of many lands

Historically, wildlife stamps have been treasured by discerning collectors for their beauty and strength of design, as well as the spectacular subjects they portray. And this collection will present an exceptional array of these important wildlife stamps—on First Day Covers from the far corners of the world. From Russia, the Siberian tiger. From Togo, the spotted leopard. From Poland, the plains wolf. From Kenya, the river crocodile. From Canada, the mountain cougar.

In addition, an original engraving will be especially created for each cover in the collection. Each of these engravings will be a colorful, yet very different, portrayal of the same wildlife subject depicted on the stamp that cover bears—designed to enhance and complement that stamp. Furthermore, these engravings will be designed exclusively for this series by noted wildlife artists of many nations. They will never be issued again.

Each cover will also be accompanied by an authoritative commentary discussing the wildlife subject depicted on both the stamp and on the engraved cover. As a result, each cover will be a fascinating educational experience, as well as a significant collectible.

Finally, every cover can be fully personalized with the name and address of the subscriber or the person designated by the subscriber, if desired.

A strictly limited edition

The International Collection of World Wildlife First Day Covers is being issued in strictly limited edition, exclusively for advance subscribers. There is an absolute limit of one subscription per person. Back issues are not available. And subscription rolls will never be opened to new subscribers again.

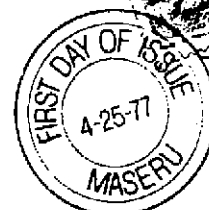

Thus, each subscriber to this important series will conveniently acquire a collection of assured rarity that combines the world's most important new wildlife stamp issues with richly engraved covers and first day of issue postmarks from around the world.

A deluxe handcrafted album, for protection and display, will also be provided to each subscriber. This album will include a special dedication from the World Wildlife

No advance payment necessary

Subscribers will receive their First Day Covers at the rate of three per month during the three-year subscription period beginning in May 1977. New subscribers in the United States will be guaranteed the issue price of $4 per cover throughout their subscription period—a most unusual and significant price guarantee. Furthermore, the subscriber may cancel the series at any time upon 30 days' notice. Once a subscription is canceled, however, it cannot be reinstated.

Final world-wide deadline for subscriptions is May 31, 1977.

New subscriptions for The International Collection of World Wildlife First Day Covers must be postmarked by May 31, 1977, to be accepted. After that date, the subscription rolls will be permanently closed, and no new subscriptions will ever be accepted again. The Franklin Philatelic Society, international stamp division of The Franklin Mint, will produce the covers and service all subscriptions. Your application should, therefore, be mailed directly to The Franklin Philatelic Society, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania 19091. Be sure it is postmarked no later than May 31, 1977.

WORLD WILDLIFE FUND

The World Wildlife Fund is an international conservation organization supporting scientific research and conservation projects designed to save endangered wildlife species and preserve their natural habitat.

Founded in 1961 by leading naturalists, scientists, businessmen and heads of state, the World Wildlife Fund today consists of national affiliates in 26 countries across five continents. Through its world headquarters in Morges, Switzerland, near Geneva, the World Wildlife Fund coordinates multinational activities aimed at reserving many natural wonders for future generations to enjoy.

Juvenile Court Judge Margaret Driscoll looked intently at the 13-year-old mugger who confronted her. Dressed up and sitting next to his mother, the youth appeared more like a choirboy than a vicious attacker who had put a 77-year-old woman in the hospital when she refused to give up her pocketbook.

"Suppose this were your grandmother," Judge Driscoll said. "What would you want me to do with the person who hurt her?"

"I don't know," replied the boy, almost inaudibly. "Stick him in jail."

Put yourself in the place of the judge. Would you lock this young predator up—as he himself suggests—to protect the interests of that old lady and others who might become his victims? If that's your thinking, it would run counter to the cornerstone theory of juvenile justice in America—which every judge is sworn to follow—"to protect the best interests of the child." And few judges believe those are best served in jail.

This predicament is at the core of what has lately become a raging national debate, one that threatens to change radically the nearly century-old system of dealing with juvenile delinquency. In state after state, legislators are working on bills designed to curb the growing fear and terror caused by juvenile street crime. Citizens demand action.

Seek stiffer penalties

Generally, these bills seek to stiffen penalties and in some cases introduce mandatory sentencing for serious juvenile offenders. Some call for the fingerprinting, photographing and public identification of youths with arrest records. But many people—including Judge Driscoll—are worried that, in the fury of this backlash, irreparable harm may be done to the special position of children in our justice system.

Margaret Driscoll, 61, shuttles between four juvenile courts in Fairfield County, Conn. As president of the National Council of Juvenile Court Judges, she is prominent among those who caution against hasty action to change the current system, which has focused on rehabilitation rather than punishment.

"When people hear about violent kids on the street," she says, "they immediately blame the juvenile justice system and say, 'This system is obviously not working; let's change it. Let's find a way to lock these kids up and keep them there for a long time.' Well, I say if we're going to start ignoring everything we've learned in this country in the past 100 years about treating delinquent kids, then we're throwing the baby out with the wash water. We're destroying a whole system that works for the sake of the 4 or 5 percent you read about in the papers."

But, says prominent criminologist Robert Martinson: "It is precisely that 4 or 5 percent that has made our streets unsafe to walk. And nobody is doing a # Violent Street Kids— Must It Be Jail?

by Joel A. Levitch & Laurel F. Vlock

An alternative to jail? At Elan—a correctional facility for juvenile delinquents near Portland, Maine—residents learn through group encounter how to express anger and hostility in ways not harmful to society. Sessions are usually loud, intense.

thing about it. Juvenile justice in America today is a nightmare of contradictions and false assumptions. Under the prevailing philosophy, there is no punishment—only 'treatment.'"

"It's not the treatment philosophy that's at fault," replies Judge Driscoll. "We simply don't have the proper facilities for the tougher delinquents. Jails and lockups don't work for children—we know that. What we need are secure, caring places that will not give up on a kid no matter how rocky the going gets. I know of only one such facility in this country, and that is where we send our toughest cases."

A place for 'incurables'

Tucked away in an isolated part of the Maine woods, about 20 miles from Portland, is that facility. Called Elan, it comprises a small group of cottage-style buildings that house about 200 so-called "incurables" from 17 states. Not all are delinquents. Many have spent long years in mental hospitals, and about half are private placements—kids whose parents pay about $15,000 a year for the specialized treatment that Elan provides. The other half have been sent by state youth agencies. Most of these are considered "end of the roaders" who could not be dealt with successfully in any local program.

Elan is a private, profit-making corporation headed by unlikely partners—Dr. Gerald Davidson, a prominent Boston psychiatrist, and Joseph Ricci, a former drug addict.

"We don't coddle kids here," says Ricci. "Good behavior is rewarded and bad behavior punished. But the punishment and 90 percent of the treatment are carried out by the kids themselves, who are damn tough on each other." Explains Dr. Davidson: "What characterizes these youngsters is a tremendous amount of anger and hostility, which they either are unable to express or express in ways that are damaging to themselves and others. What we do here is teach them how to control impulses and show anger in more acceptable ways."

A tour of Elan can be rather bizarre and unsettling. The screaming during group-encounter sessions is loud and intense. The language is obscene. There are fully grown teenagers walking around in baby clothes and carrying teddy bears they are forbidden to put down—standard punishment for infantile behavior. Many wear dunce caps for poor performance in school. If a youngster behaves like a bully, he is put in the "boxing ring" with someone twice his size. Bad behavior of any kind is almost invariably punished, while good behavior wins increased privileges. The average stay at Elan is 18 months.

Questions raised

Paradoxically, Elan raises more questions than it answers—questions that reflect the complexity of the national controversy over how to curb juvenile street violence. "The truth," says Yale Law School youth-crime specialist Andrew Rutherford, "is that no one, Elan included, actually has a handle on this problem. In the first place, if you look closely, you'll find that darn few muggers or other street types ever find their way to Elan or any of the so-called 'end of the road' institutions for special treatment.

"This is because your streetwise kid is likely to be a pretty 'together' individual. He's hardest to catch, and once caught knows how to play the system for all it's worth to get out quickly."

Ricci does not entirely disagree with Rutherford: "Very often what the states send to us in the way of 'tough cases' are really 'managerial misfits'—kids who bounce from institution to institution because they have emotional problems that no one can deal with."

It may seem incomprehensible in a nation which spends about $17 billion each year fighting crime that violent kids have created a paralysis of fear.

"Make no mistake about it," warns psychologist Fritz Redl, who has been studying violence in children for nearly half a century. "We are breeding a whole generation of hostile youngsters whose sense of self-worth comes from triumphing over the adult world. This they do by hurting people and ripping them off. But if you're going to crack down on them, you'd better find more rational things to do than simply lock them up. Otherwise, there will certainly be hell to pay when they come back."

Crackdown coming

Redl may warn against a precipitous crackdown, but that's what is coming. New York State, for example, recently raised from 18 months to five years the maximum penalty a juvenile can receive for serious crime. Its new code directs family court judges for the first time to protect not only the "best interests" of the child, but the community as well. Legislators are already moving to toughen the code even further.

Meanwhile, Judge Driscoll and others are watching the trend warily as it develops across the country. "Vindictiveness has a way of getting out of hand," she cautions. "With juvenile offenders, at least we have a chance—they're still young, they're moldable. We just can't afford to blow it."

AND THAT'S JUST THE BEGINNING THERE ARE 951 MORE!!!

Have you ever wondered how professional musicians learn all the songs they are requested to play? How can they ever afford to buy all that sheet music? Well, most of them don't! Up until a few years ago they could buy a 'fake' book of 500 songs or more (It was illegal in those days) Such a great book would cost them only $75 or so. A fantastic savings for $500 to $1 000's worth of music! But now thanks to Hansen Publishing the greatest 'fake' book of all time is available (and legally too) to professionals and amateurs alike and for only $14.95 (Your mail order price is only $12.95!) That's just over a penny per song... songs which usually sell for $1.00 or more each.

This great collection is guaranteed to thrill and delight every member of your family. Music for all ages... songs for every musical taste. From Country to Rock, Pop & Jazz... and, of course, the great standard love songs of all time. Try it at your next party... and see who can stump the piano player. With this book it is almost impossible!

LEARN TO PLAY BY CHORDS

In addition to the 1001 songs, this fantastic songbook also contains sections of instrumental instruction. How To Play Chords (for the beginning guitarist)... How To Learn-and-Play By Chords (for all keyboard instruments)... PLUS... a complete guide to all organ registrations.

The book is plastic-spiral bound... so it lies perfectly flat on your music stand. All songs are in alphabetical order so you can find them quickly, just like the 'pros' do.

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Here's a book we'll allow you to return for up to 30 days... because it will take at least a month for you to get through it. If after one full month you don't agree that this is the most complete, most entertaining music book you could ever own... just return it for a complete refund. No questions asked.

So why not order yours today. You've absolutely nothing to lose... and endless years of musical enjoyment to gain.

Keeping Up... With Youth

by Pamela Swift

RUTH MCCARTNEY

Another McCartney

Another McCartney is entering show business. Ruth—whose step-brother Paul made the big time and the big money by joining the Beatles and then going out on his own—is forming her own group.

It's called simply Talent and consists of 18-year-old Ruth and two partners, Sunny Smith and Meta Stewart, also 18. Their routine is dance, comedy and song, and a few weeks ago they opened up at a club in Liverpool.

Ruth says she was 5 years old when Beatlemania was at its height and her mother Angela, then 34, married widower Jim McCartney, Paul's father, who was then 62.

"Like so many other kids," Ruth says, "I had an enormous crush on Paul McCartney. One night I remember my mother lifting me up and putting me in Paul's lap. I was so happy even as a child being in his arms that I fainted clean away."

Dubious Distinction

There are at least half a dozen educational institutions in this country which charge—or soon will—$7000 a year and up for tuition. But Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., recently announced that it was raising tuition for its medical school freshmen to $12,500 per year, an all-time high.

Georgetown, which boasts the second largest private medical school in the nation, will charge its med school sophomores $10,500 per year, its juniors $8750 per year, and its seniors $8250.

According to Matthew F. Mc-

Nulty Jr., chancellor of the Georgetown Medical Center, these astronomical increases were brought about by Congressional refusal to extend the District of Columbia Medical and Dental Manpower Act, which paid Georgetown and George Washington University medical schools direct subsidies.

Next fall, George Washington University officials announce, its medical school freshmen will pay $9000 for tuition.

TAKING CUTTINGS FROM A PLANT IS A POPULAR AND EFFECTIVE METHOD OF ACQUIRING SOME KINDS OF PLANTS. IT IS A FAIRLY EASY METHOD FOR PROPAGATING PLANTS SUCH AS GERANIUMS, CHRYSANTHEMUMS, SOME BEGONIAS, IMPATIENS, IVYS, ETC.

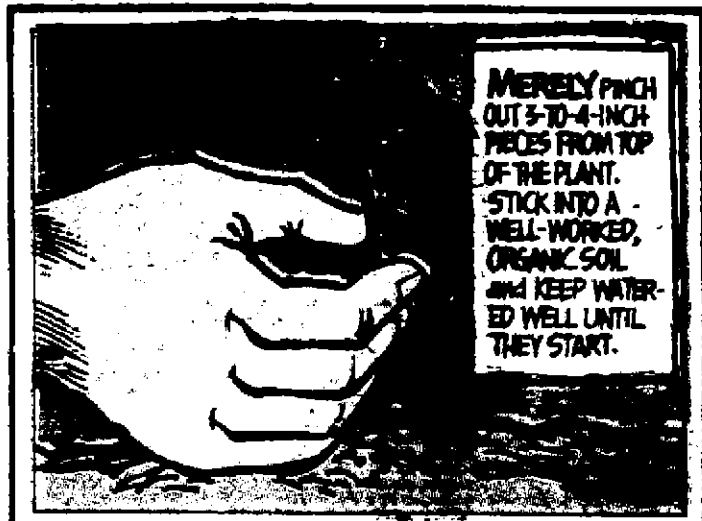

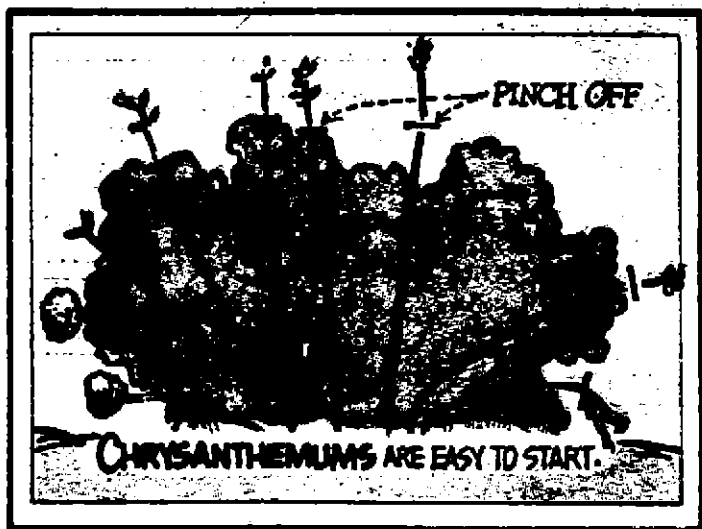

CUTTINGS FROM THESE PLANTS CAN BE TAKEN ANY TIME OF THE YEAR. THE FIRST STEP IS TO PINCH AWAY THE STEM, LEAVING ABOUT 4 INCHES OF STEM. THERE SHOULD BE AT LEAST TWO NODES OR JOINTS IN THE CUTTING. PINCH OFF ANY FLOWERS, AND STRIP THE LEAVES OFF THE BOTTOM PORTION OF THE STEM. DON'T PULL DOWN ON THE ENDS OF THE LEAVES WHEN REMOVING THEM, AS YOU'LL ONLY CAUSE THE STEM TO TEAR. INSTEAD, CAREFULLY PINCH THEM OFF.

THE CUTTINGS MAY BE PLACED IN POTS IN A

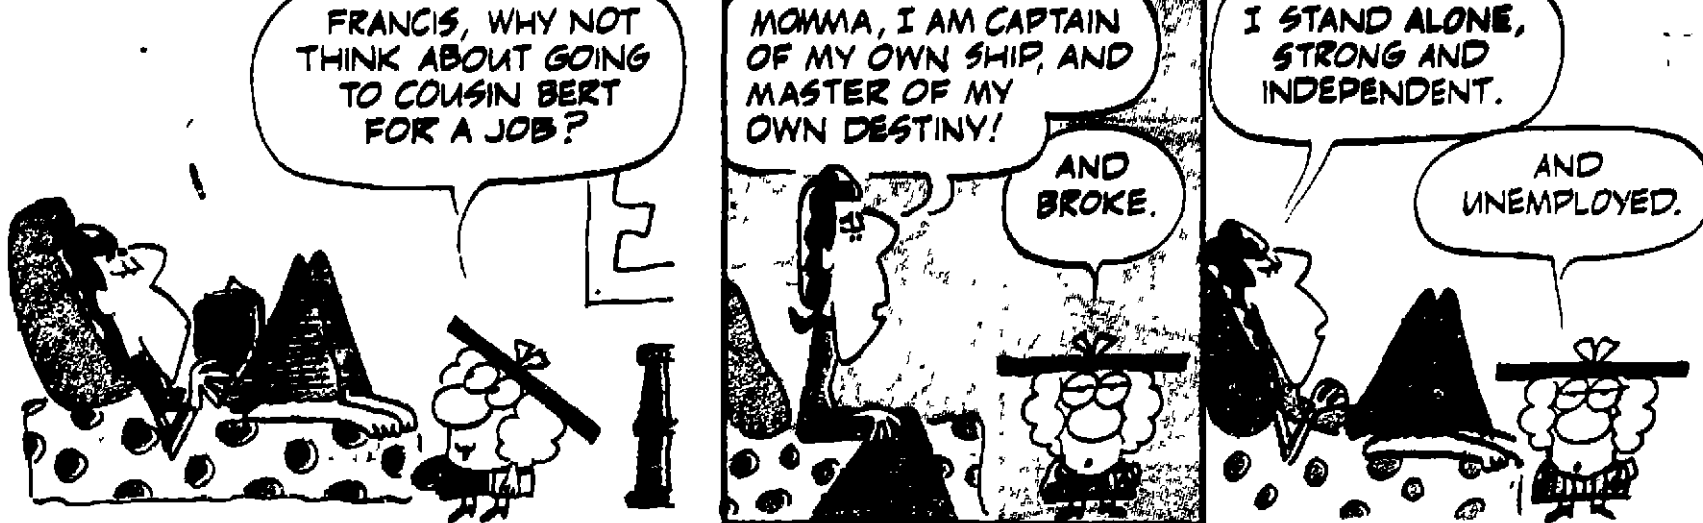

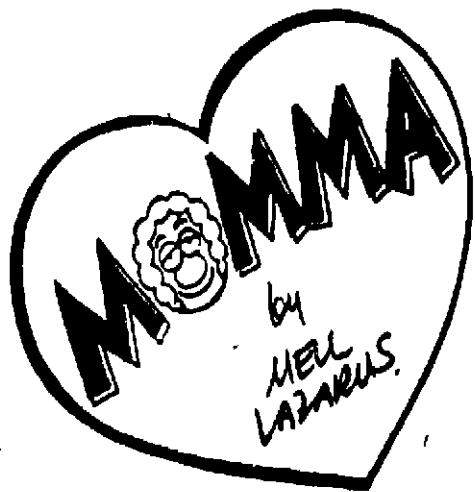

FLOWER POT WITH DAMP SAND OR ORGANIC SOIL TO WHICH A GOOD BIT OF SAND HAS BEEN ADDED. THEY CAN ALSO BE PLACED IN A JAR OF WATER UNTIL THE ROOT SYSTEM DEVELOPS. OR THEY CAN BE PLACED IN THE GROUND. THE CUTTINGS MUST BE KEPT WELL WATERED AND IN A SHADED AREA UNTIL THEY START.

IT'S AN EASY AND GREAT WAY OF ADDING MORE FLOWERS TO YOUR GARDEN AND HOUSE.

PINCH! PINCH!
